NORTH WEST.

The following we clip from a communication in the Advance, from Mr. R. Gordon of Flesherton, who is on a trip to the North West.

After enjoying the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Cullen (whose kindness I never shall forget) for a few days, we returned to Regina—our friend placing his comfortable rig at our disposal, and kindly driving us to the city.

On Monday evening, June 4th, I started on my homeward trip, arriving next morning at Wolseley where our old time friends, Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Dodds, gave us a hearty welcome. They have settled down in one of the best localities of the Qu'Appelle district, and this rising town has a better appearance as regards surroundings than Regina. The the reason is because all the farms surrounding Wolseley, being of a superior quality, well watered, and all taken up and improved by actual settlers, and nearly every half section having a neat cottage, even quite close to the town, gives it a home-like appearance in a strong contrast with Regina where the farm houses are miles out, giving the country a desolate appearance. Wolseley is destined to be one of the liveliest places on the line, and our friend Dodds will be found in a comfortable and well stocked general store, doing a splendid business. He has the run of the place, and and also does the bulk of the trade of the Primitive Methodist colony located about 30 miles North of this place and composed of upwards of 150 families. We paid a visit to the Dodds homestead yesterday, and I find that our friend has not been unmindful to himself with regard to providing a pleasant home when he retires from public life—he being the leading man of that place, having lately been commissioned a J. P. He is also issuer of Marriage Licenses and only requires a good supply of the gentle sex from Ontario to make youthful pioneers of this locality happy. The immediate vicinity of the town is chiefly settled by emigrants from Nova Scotia, who are of energetic and pushing habits ; and my impression is that in the near future this settlement will be one of the richest on the line of the C. P. R.

Kimberly.

The attempted elopement of a young couple who thought they ought to be married notwithstanding that the damsel's father was of a different opinion, has caused a great deal of talk and considerable hard feeling with one rough and tumble fight which is now in the hands of one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, R. Gilray, for settlement. It is to be hoped that the whole affair will be settled there.

A shoemaker would find plenty of work and a nice location in Kimberly.

Alex. Fawcett sold two cows last week for $85. This kind of stock is more profitable than wheat raising.

Crops look well.

The potato bug is here again taking forcible possession of the potato crop.

THE LIME TREE.

How Our Lime Juice is Made, and Where the Montserrat comes from.

In Canon Kingsley's "At Last," there occurs the following passage:—"And now on the leeward bow, another gray mountain island rose. This was Montserrat, which I should have gladly visited, as I had been invited to do; for little Montserrat is just now the scene of a very hopeful and important experiment. The Messrs. Sturge have established there a large plantation of limes, and a manufactory of Lime-Juice, which promises to be able to supply, in good time, vast quantities of that most useful of all sea medicines, and I for one heartily bid God speed to the enterprise."

These prophertic words are now abundantly verified. "Little Montserrat" annually exports from over quarter of a million gallons of pure delicious Lime Fruit Juice, which is not only "the most useful of all Sea Medicines," but is rapidly gaining its way into Domestic use throughout the world, as a pleasant, refreshing health giving beverage.

The little island of Montserrat, considered the most healthy of the Antilles, is about eight miles in length, and five in breadth, and is composed of a small cluster of volcanic mountain tops, rising out of the Caribbean Sea to the height of 3,000 feet, the summits being often concealed by floating clouds.

This island was discovered in 1493 by Columbus, who gave it the name of Montserrat, after the noted mountain of Montserrat in Catalonia. In 1632 it was colonised by English settlers, who appear in the first instance to have been cultivators, each working his own little farm. Like the adjacent islands, it was long a bone of contention between the English and French; and even now some of the massive guns used in these contests may be found on the tops of the steepest ranges, partially concealed in the thick tropical vegetation. The French took the island in 1664, restored it to England in 1668, retook it in 1782, and finally gave it up in 1784. At the beginning of the eighteenth century, slave labor began to supplant that of the white settlers; for at that period Jamaica, with Barbadoes and some half-dozen smaller islands, amongst which was Montserrat, had a monopoly of the English sugar market, and consequently the cultivation became very profitable, so that by the close of the century the number of slaves in Montserrat had increased to 10,090, (at the time of the emancipation the number of slaves was 6,355 for whom the mother country paid £103,538), whose labor produced about 2,700 hogsheads of sugar each year; but the conquest of Trinidad and Demerara, in 1802, afforded a cheaper field of suppy for home market, and the production in Montserrat gradually declined, till by the time of the formation of Sturge's Montserrat Company, in 1868, the whole of the northern portion of the island had gone out of cultivation, and the annual export of sugar was reduced to about 950 hogsheads, whilst the white population had declined to 240 persons. Since then the sugar cultivation has gradually increased, and a year's shipments again reached 2,500 hogsheads.

The Lime Tree (Citrus Limetta) is a member of the orange tribe, which grows wild in many tropical countries, but does not flourish even so far north as the Azores. It is a thorny, bushy, evergreen tree, with handsome dark green leaves. These are so fragrant that they are universally used in the West Indies to perfume the water in the finger glasses at dessert. The small white flowers resemble orange blossom, and the scent is equally delicious. The first Lime Tree orchards here were planted by a Mr. Burke, in 1852.

The plantations of the Montserrat Company now cover more than 600 acres, and contain 120,000 trees. These are generally planted fifteen feet apart, and the high road passes through them for a distance of more than two miles. No more beautiful sight can be seen than these orchards, when the trees are laden with their bright fruit, and at the same time the air is pervaded by the luscious fragrance of the blossom. The fruit is gathered by the negro women, and they carry it down in baskets on their heads.

The important antiscorbutic properties of lime-juice have been well known for many years, and the refreshing lemonade which is made by mixing it with water and sugar is universally used in countries where the tree grows. The bulk of the lime-juice that is offered (and from which most lime-juice cordials are manufactured) is made from the fruit of the trees that now grow wild so abundantly in Jamaica, Tahiti, and elsewhere. In some parts of Jamaica the negroes go about the country squeezing the fruit they find under the scattered trees into a pail with a wooden kitchen lemon-squeezer. This juice is bought by the merchants for a few pence a gallon. As lime-juice decomposes very rapidly when exposed to the atmosphere in a tropical climate, and acquires a disagreeable taste in a few hours, unless the air is excluded from it, it may easily be imagined that the juice so obtained does not please the average taste, even if it had not, as is sometimes the case, been adulterated with salt water by the negroes to increase its bulk. In fact, until the introduction of the Montserrat juice, lime-juice was not popular as a beverage, on account of the mawkish taste which, as explained above, is so often carried with it. In order to ensure a regular supply of juice of reliable quality, extensive lime plantations were established more than twenty years ago, by Messrs. Sturge, of Birmingham, in the island of Montserrat; where alone is the lime systematically cultivated on a large scale for the purpose of supplying juice as a beverage.

The juice, from the care with which it is prepared, racked, and bottled, retains its flavor, citricity, and brightness for an indefinite period, unless the bottle be not sufficiently corked after being opened, when a light mould may appear. This may not, however, necessarily affect the remedial effects of the juice.

Since the introduction of Montserrat Lime-fruit juice, Lime-juice or cordials prepared therefrom have undoubtedly become most popular beverages, and the fact that over 200,000 gallons was imported last year from Montserrat shows the estimation they are now held in, and the important trade that has been developed. Up to the time of the Montserrat Co. introducing their Lime-fruit juice, pure Lime-juice was practically unknown, and even at present there is no regular source from which pure Lime-juice can be obtained but Montserrat. Most of the lime-juice and lime-juice cordials now offered are such only in name, either being prepared from lemon-juice, or artificial compounds, and so highly charged with deleterious acids as to be prejudicial to health. The Lancet has drawn attention to this recently, and recommended pure lime-fruit juice as one of the best and most wholesome beverages extant. They also stated as follows in 1870:—"We have subjected the samples of the lime-fruit juice of the Montserrat Company to full analysis, with a view to test its quality and purity. We have found it to be in sound condition and entirely free from adulteration."

It is only within the last four years that the Montserrat Lime-juice has been introduced into Canada, but being placed in the hands of probably the most reputable firm dealing in such articles in Canada,—Messrs. H. Sugden Evans & Co., wholesale druggists, Montreal,—it has come into popular use very quickly, and may now be had from almost every dealer in the Dominion. So popular has it grown that it is necessary for the firm to warn consumers to see that the bottles have their trade mark on the labels and capsules. The introduction of such a beverage for common use is a healthful sign of the times.

Paper Railroad Ties.

The wooden sleepers under our railway tracts consume an enormous amount of wood every year; 70,000,000 railroad ties are needed annually in this country alone, and the life of this underlying lumber is only five years long. Three hundred thousand acres of forest are yearly cut down to supply the wood needed for railroad construction and repair. The railroads alone would in time strip the country of every tree. It has now been found that paper made from straw can be so manipulated as to supply the sleepers and ties now made wholly of wood. It will last ten time longer than wood, and does not cost more originally. There is no end of straw and other fibrous materials; which can be used in the manufacture of paper, while our woods are disappearing, each tree of which it takes nearly a hundred years to mature. Paper has been used to make every part of a house, including all the furniture and utensils. Of late years it has very generally been used in the construction of car wheels. Its employment for railway ties will save our forests. Railroads, however, suggest the names of the capitalists who own or control them. Quite recently some very important events have happened in the railroad world.

A Bridegroom Rejected at the Altar.

Society people of Albuquerque were enveloped in amazement recently when the news was spread through the city of a sensation attending the arranged wedding at the residence of Mr. Edward Powell. The intended bride was Miss Ida Smedley, and the bridegroom elect Mr. A. L. Stivers. Miss Smedley is a niece of Mrs. Powell, and is one of the brightest and most charming young ladies that has been introduced into Albuquerque society, while Mr. Stivers is a wealthy cattle grower, the owner of an extensive ranche near Alamosa, in the western part of Valencia county. He figured before the public some months ago in a war with sheep men. Everything was arranged for the wedding, the wine was on ice, the cakes baked, and at the appointed hour the Rev. Mr. Keistler put in his appearance. No cards had been issued for the wedding, but there were present quite a number of prominent ladies and gentlemen, immediate friends of the family. The lady and gentleman soon to be made man and wife were attired to suit the occasion, and stood up before the minister of the Gospel to pronounce their solemn vows.

"Will you take this woman for your lawful wife?" asked the Rev. Mr. Keistler.

"I will," responded the bridegroom elect.

"Will you take this man for your lawful husband?" continued the minister.

"My God! I can't, I can't, I can't," was the pitiful response of the young lady, who, bursting into tears, rushed into an adjoining apartment. The ladies went to her assistance and advised with her, and the rejected bridegroom tried to persuade her to change her determination and become his wife, but it was to no purpose. The young lady would not change her mind.

Miss Smedley has received attentions from Mr. Stivers since last winter. They have been engaged to marry since some months ago. But then the young lady has since entertained grave doubts as to their compatibility of temperament, yet, looking on her engagement as irrevocable, she has allowed matters to proceed even to the wedding ceremony, when she found it impossible to pronounce the words that would make her a life partner of a man whom she evidently did not love.—Denver Tribune.

Mixed Politics.

"What are your views in regard to the tariff?" asked an enterprising reporter of a gentleman who was standing at the bar drinking with a friend.

"I'm in favor of the protection of American industries," frankly answered the person addressed.

"Then, of course, you are a Republican," added the newspaper man.

"Not if I know myself. I'm a Democrat."

"And have you any opinion on the subject?" continued the scribe, turning to the gentleman's friend.

"You may put me down as a free trader," replied the latter.

"Oh, I see; you're a Democrat."

"Nary time. I'm a Republican. What are you?"

"Well," replied the astonished reporter, I was a Democrat when I came in here, but I'm blowed if I know what I am now."

The growth of telegraph business in England since the state has acquired control of the lines is said to have been enormous. The number of messages per week have grown from 126,000 to 603,000. In 1873 the average number of messages per mile of wire was 147; now it is 256. In press messages, 5,000 words per diem have grown already to 934,154 per day. The telegraphs in use on railways have grown from 27,000 miles of wire in 1869 to 69,000 in 1882, and the instruments from 4,426 to 15,702. In Japan, last year, 2,223,214 messages were despatched, of which 92 per cent. were in the native tongue.

ODD STORIES ABOUT ANIMALS.

In a fright, on being chased by a hawk a partridge flew against Joseph Brink, of Sullivan county, N. Y., with such force as to break its neck.

Charles Hedrick, of Lexington, N.C., shot an eagle which had black back, wings, and tail, while its neck and breast were as white as snow It measured seven feet from tip to tip.

In a burning cabin in Franklin county, Ga., two colored children perished, and a dog which had been left with them refused to leave them and was burned to death by their side.

A buzzard dined on a lamb that had been killed by a dog at New Garden, Ga. In some way it got fast in the strap which fastened the bell around the lamb's neck, and has gone gingling about the bell ever since.

In Paducah two English sparrows tried to drown each other in a street gutter. The struggle was a long and desparate one, and finally one got the head of the other under water and kept it there until life was extinct.

There are people in Norwich, Conn., who believe that a robin in that town fastened a string to the limb of a pear tree, wound the string about its neck, and then dropped from its perch, and in a few moments died of strangulation, while its unhappy mate sung a requiem.

A Franklin, Mass., dog saw a man drop his handkerchief in the street. The dog picked it up, and, going to the door of the house into which the man had entered, made his presence known by repeated raps. When the door was opened the dog presented the lost handkerchief to its owner.

The granary of L. M. McIntosh, on the bank of the Sacramento River at Chico, was mysteriously robbed night after night. A watch was set, and then a large flock of wood ducks was seen entering the granary through a broken window pane in regular line. After the last duck had got inside the watchers secured the window, and, going inside armed with sticks, killed 198 ducks which had been feeding on the grain.

A curious experiment was made recently at Paris to determine the power of a crocodile's jaw. The animal was fixed on a table with its upper jaw connected with a dynamometer. An electric shock caused him to give a sudden snap. Three hundred and eight pounds was marked on the instrument. It was calculated that the contractile force of the muscles causing the movement was 1,540 pounds. The muscle on an ordinary sporting dog had 300 pounds of contractile force.

A chubby brown sparrow flew up from the ground in Boston Common carrying in its beak a soda biscuit. He flew but a few feet before he dropped the biscuit, when another sparrow seized it and carried it a few feet further, and so one after another carried it along until the last sparrow dropped it plump on a horse-car track. Then away they all flew, as if their object had been accomplished. Pretty soon along came a car, and, passing over the cracker, ground it into crumbs. Then down swooped the whole flock of feathered philosophers and made a good breakfast.

A flock of sheep blocked up the entrance to a bridge spanning Mill Creek, near Chester park, Ohio. A large shepherd dog had been trying to induce the sheep to cross the bridge, but they were suspicious and held back. Presently the dog, discouraged by his unsuccessful efforts to drive them, leaped upon the backs of the sheep, which, in their crowded condition, looked like one woolly floor, ran along to the bridge entrance, leaped upon the floor, and, seizing in his mouth the neck of one of the ewes, dragged her along on the bridge. Once on the floor of the bridge the old ewe's suspicions were allayed, and she trotted on across, followed by the whole flock, while the dog stepped to one side, let them all pass, and then trotted along behind.

An old hunter loaned his dog to a friend, an amateur, and this is what the amateur said after returning without the dog: "I never was so disconcerted as when I caught the reproachful glance of the old dog's eye after missing as fair a shot as I ever had; and as I soon repeated the performance, I could plainly see in his expressive countenance disgust as well as reproach. Although I have stood behind the trap and, amid the jeers and hoots of the crowd, missed my ten birds straight, I never was so utterly demoralized in my life, and of course I missed the next one, when the old dog, with a look that will haunt me to my dying day, hung his head, and curling his tail between his legs, dejectedly marched back to the waggon, and actually showed his teeth when I tried to coax him out again."

A singular contest between bluebirds and martens occured in Lexington, Ky. While two bluebirds were building a nest in a box a pair of martens laid claim to the nest. Considerable skirmishing was carried on for several days, the bluebirds every time coming off victorious. The neighborhood was startled early one morning be the noise made by a congregation of hundreds of martens and bluebirds, and soon a general battle along the whole line began. For an hour it was carried on with great fierceness and vindictiveness. The birds paid no attention to the surroundings, but fell fighting at the feet of persons standing in the yard. The weather being pleasant the windows in the houses were raised that the family might witness the conflict. Numbers of birds passed through the windows, and several pairs were caught in the rooms fastened together. There were no cowards or shirks, but every bird seemed intent on doing his whole duty. In one hour the martens were beaten and retired from the contest, leaving the bluebirds in possession of the field.

Canadian Bazaar.

Mr. John Osborne, Musical Bazaar, Toronto, Canada, writes that his wife was cured of rheumatism by the great pain-banisher, St. Jacobs Oil; that he has found it an invaluable remedy for many ailments.

A German newspaper says the number of people living in Paris who speak the German language is 110,000, which makes Paris the fifteenth largest German city in point of population. Of these 110,000 about 70,000 belong to the German Empire, the remainder being Austrians, Swiss, Alsacians, German-Russians, and German-Americans.

Our March Through the Heavens.

It is difficult to comprehend that, in addition to the earth's motion around the sun, the latter is also moving through space at the rate of 160,000,000 miles in a year. The astronomers of the last century discovered that our solar system was flying through space in the direction of the constellation Hercules; in other words, if the spectator were to take a stationary point in the heavens, he would see our sun with its attending planets passing through the space at the rate of nearly 450,000 miles per day. Six thousand years ago, it is computed, our solar system was a million millions of miles farther from the stars of Hercules than it is to day. The region in which we are entering is more thickly studded with stars—that is, with suns of other solar systems—than the heavenly regions we have left behind us. What a marvellous universe we live in! When we travel on a railway car at the rate of fifty miles an hour, it makes our head swim; but when we call to mind that the earth revolves on its axis once in twenty-four hours and around the sun, 92,000,000 miles distant, in 365 days, and that that sun is flying through space 160,000,000 miles in a year, human consciousness cannot comprehend the mad whirl of worlds by which we are surrounded. What fairy tale or Arabian Nights story is half so marvelous as the simplest and most ordinary facts in astronomy?

Perhaps the deepest coal mine on this continent is at Pottsville, Pa. The shaft is 1,576 feet deep—nearly a third of a mile. Every day during the busy season 200 cars, containing four tons each, are sent from below to the upper world, the time of each taip being a little over a minute.

Sydney Smith being ill, his physician advised him to "take a walk upon an empty stomach." "Upon whose?" asked Sydney. Still better steps to take would be the purchase of Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are especially valuable to those who are obliged to lead sedentary lives, or are afflicted with any chronic disease of the stomach or bowels. Men live in a world of discord and fault, to be sure, but it is because they make it so. We must go through the world with faculties alert for picking out the beautiful, the true, the fragrant, the musical. If we wish to live in a world that is a good world we must be "kindly affectionate one to another."

A troubled mind is often relieved by maintaining a cheerful demeanor. The effort withdraws its attention from the cause of pain, and the cheerfulness which it promotes in others extends by sympathy to itself.

Highly Satisfactory.

Impure blood and low vitality are the great sources of most diseases for which Burdock Blood Bitters is the specific. S. Perrin, Druggist, of Lindsay, writes that Burdock Blood Bitters give more general satisfaction than any blood purifier in the market. (25)

The way to wealth is as plain as the way to market. It depends chiefly on two words, industry and frugality; that is waste neither time nor money, but make the best use of both.

Diphtheria—that terrible scourge of the present day—attacks chiefly those whose vitality is low and blood impure. The timely use of Burdock Blood Bitters forestalls the evils of impure blood, and saves doctor's bills. Sample bottles 10 cents. (30)

To know how to say what other people only think, is what makes men poets and sages; and to dare to say what others only dare to think, makes men martyrs or reformers, or both.

Imitators vs. Substitutors.

Good points are worth remembering, for the reason that they assist us in avoiding many discomforts, and protect us against the cupidity of over-reaching people. When you learn from friends that PUTNAM'S CORN EXTRACTOR is safe, prompt and effectual, don't allow druggists to palm off a worthless and perhaps poisonous substitute, His object is quite patent. He wishes to make a few cents difference between a good article and a cheap imitation or substitute, Putman's Corn Extractor. Sold everywhere. Beware of dangerous imitations. The Editor of the Grand River Sachem says—"We are usually sparing in our enconiums towards patent medicines, but observation and enquiry has satisfied us that the preparation of Messrs. T. A slender acquaintance with the world must convince every man that actions, not words, are the true criterion of the attachment of friends; and that the most liberal professions of good will are very far from being the surest marks of it.—George Washington.

A LIGHTNING BYCICLE RIDE

Down a Mountain Grade which Fell Three Hundred Feet to the Mile.

Our mine, the Spondulix, of Colorado, was the highest on the range. It was 2,670 feet above Silver Brick station, and nine miles distant from the village. From the works up to the mines it was a broad, hard, smooth road, used for carting ore down from the mines and bringing supplies up. The average grade down the mountain was 300 feet to the mile; in some places it was steeper, and at intervals almost level.

By constant practice I managed at last to ride my fifty-two inch University roadster up the whole slope to the Spondulix, of course resting at levels, but my chief delight was the coasting down again; it required skill, a good deal of nerve, and a firm grasp of the brake.

One evening an accident occurred to one of the men engaged at the mine. I instantly got out my bycicle, explaining that I could go swifter than a horse down the slope. In a few minutes I had on my riding suit and was off.

The night air was clear and crisp; the full moon, except in a few curves, shone directly into the gulch, lighting up the road. Leaning well back, with my legs over the handles and a firm finger on the brake, I allowed the wheel to glide down the first long slope at a speed which I had never dared to venture before. Finding the motion safe, I allowed the wheel to run faster, and still faster. Over the first level I shot like an arrow. Down the next slope I seemed to glide with the rushing wind. Then I turned the next curve and ran into the shadow of a mountain upon the next level. Knowing every inch of the road, however, I did not slacken my speed, except very slightly.

As I flew over the top of the next slope, a steep plunge of nearly half a mile, another curve making the road almost as dark as a pocket. Here I put down the brake hard, and checked my speed materially. Still I knew the road so well I had no fear. But just as I was on the steepest plunge of the slope—

COMPLETELY SHUT OUT THE MOON,

Clink!

Something flew from the machine like a bullet. Instantly the wheel darted forward like the rush of a frightened bird, while the brake lever came home to the steering bar under my finger.

The brake had broken short off at the elbow!

There was nothing to check the machine which was running away with me, with over five miles of mountain grade before me, and the chance of meeting a team at any moment in the dark. I might have leaped backward off the machine at the instant of the break, but five seconds afterwards it was too late. To attempt a dismount would be certain death. There was nothing to do but stick to the saddle and take my chances.

When the accident happened to the brake I was just entering a dark curve in the shadow of the mountain. The wall on my right appeared a dark, almost invisible brown, while the chasm on my left was of inky darkness. As I rounded the hollow of the curve I could see the moonlight shining far ahead on the point of the elbow which I must turn where the road was channelled into the wall. As I approached it I had the sense and nerve to run on the outer side of the road, close to the edge of the canon, thus giving myself as broad a turn as possible. I found by the track of the wheel afterward that at the sharpest turn I had actually ridden within for several rods, where, if I had been going at a less fearful speed, the wheel would certainly have slipped over the edge and carried me down a fall of 1,000 feet.

Safely past this, the worst point, the remaining curves were easy. Thus far there had been no time to think. My actions were more instinctive than reasoning. My mind was a wild, confused whirl of sensations and fears.

But now, as I shot down the last steep incline, suddenly I experienced a terrible mental shock. It was caused by hearing the tinkle of a bell far below and seeing the spark of a lantern such as the mine teamsters carry in front of their waggons. There was a team, perhaps a train of teams, coming up the road! In a few seconds I should be upon them. The shock made me think, and that clearly. If the teamster was walking beside his team he would be on the inside, next to the mountain wall, and the team would be in the middle of the road. If he was riding, the team would be kept near the mountain wall, and at a safe distance from the outer edge of the track. Either way my best chance was to pass on the outside. As I approached, therefore, I ran close to the outside edge of the track, and flew by in safety, hearing the teamster shout as I did so. Here it was lucky that I was going at such a speed, for the teamster saw when I was nearly a mile distant, and, recognizing it, he started his team toward the outer edge of the road, so as to give me the safest passage on the inside; but I passed him before the team could be driven over, otherwise I should have surely run into them.

And now the wheel ran along the level to the bottom of the mountain; still my frightful velocity did not perceptibly diminish. I ran on past the works, into and along the village street. Luckily the street was covered thinly with sand—not enough to make it bad riding, but sufficient to gradually stop a coasting wheel. My speed slackened perceptibly. Still I ran nearly through the village, and then managed to turn a broad corner and up the slope of a side street, which finally checked my speed so that I ventured to drop my feet cautiously and take the pedals, after touching them as they came up for a number of revolutions, to help to check the machine.

And so I finally stopped and leaped to the ground exactly in front of Dr. Cameron's house.

On mounting at the mine house I had looked at my watch, after a habit I had; and now, from the same habit I looked at it again. I was not astonished to find that I had made the nine miles from the mine to the doctor's in a few seconds less than thirteen minutes. Allowing six and a quarter for the first two miles before the break gave way, and I must have made the last seven miles in less than six and three-quarter minutes. I firmly believe that I covered seven miles in less than six and a half minutes, incredible as such speed seems.

All Day in a Mexican Town.

No one seems in a hurry in these places. And why should they be? The necessaries of life are few and very cheap, and the extra dollar needed for the Sunday cock-fight or the weekly game of "monte," of the men, and the fan or comb or silver shawl pin of the women, easily earned, and so the good man is not obliged to walk fast on off days when he is in town and goes round to the "matanza," or butcher's shop, to buy a piece of meat for dinner, and there is not the least reason why he should not stop for twenty minutes on the sidewalk and talk to Juan or Jose, whom he has encountered on the way, or spend half an hour in at the "tendajo," hanging over the counter and discussing a glass of mescal and the crops with Tomas or Teleaforo. The good wife, too, rises early, and the day is still young by the time she has fetched water from the river and swept the earthen floor of the one living room and the "patio" outside and given the good man his breakfast and dispatched him to the fields, and she has ample time to don her black head-shawl and trot off to morning service, and by no means hurries herself as she walks home again and drops Donnas Juana and Maria and Nictoriana at their respective doors, stopping awhile to exchange a few parting remarks with each; ample time has she, too, to prepare the inevitable tortillas, beans and coffee for the mid-day meal.

From noonday till between 2 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon (during which hours the inhabitants are all in doors eating dinner and taking the subsequent "siesta") is the quietest and laziest time of all. Then, indeed, does the little town seem like a city of the dead. "The streets lie white, silent and deserted in the fierce sunlight, nothing stirring in them save a hungry pig or two, or a dog going somewhere on unavoidable business, his head hanging and his tongue out, as he hugs closely to the mud wall which offers the faintest prospect of a little shade. Even the voice of the irrepressible cock gets faint and weary at these hours, and the mournful cooing of the pigeons becomes low and intermittent."

Between three and four o'clock the town begins to wake up slowly. At 4, or thereabouts, comes "merienda," a sort of afternoon tea, consisting of coffee and cakes. At 5 the women dress and go out visiting. At 7 the bells sound for "oracion," or evening service; at 8 comes supper, and by 9 all is as still as the grave, except on Sunday nights, when the band plays in the little "plaza," on moonlight nights, when the rich notes of the mocking bird fill the silence and make the exiled Englisman think of nightingales and home,—Garcia (Mex.) Correspondence.

CURIOUS FACTS.

It is stated that the Indians of Alaska do not belong to the same race as the North American Indians, but are probably an offshoot from the Japanese or Coreans.

Before cutting a man's head off in China the authorities considerately make him drunk; and occasionally a rich convict who has been sentenced to death will hire, or rather buy, a coolie to take his place. The coolie leads a riotous life for some little time beforehand, and at last, in a state of besotted helplessness meets death without apparent suffering.

When Charles Kean was playing Richard III. at Exeter, just as he was getting the worst of the combat with his rival, his Newfoundland watching the mimic fray from the wings, thinking his master in danger, rushed on the stage, and dashing fiercely at the dismayed Richmond, put him to sudden and ignominious flight, and brought the tragedy to an unlooked-for end.

Jonathan Ames, a farmer who lived near Troy, N.Y., died recently. He was an eccentric individual, and in the heat of midsummer dressed in furs. His wife states that they dwelt under the same roof for a quarter of a century, and in all that time never spoke to each other. Their silence was caused by a disagreement concerning a sermon. Ames contended that the parson said one thing, and his wife was just as certain he said something else. The upshot of the discussion was that they vowed eternal silence toward each other. Even while Ames was on his deathbed the vow was not broken. They lived on apparently good terms, speaking to and mingling with the neighbors.

According to Sir John Lubbock, down to the year 1825 the English Government gave to the tax-payer a notched stick as a receipt. The old exchequer tallies were willow rods about five feet long, which were notched at certain intervals, each notch being understood to mean so many pounds, shillings, and pence, or fractions thereof. When the amounts were thus notched, the stick was split, one part being kept by the taxpayer and the other by the Government. Immense numbers of these old tallies were stowed away in a vault in the House of Commons, and it is said that they were probably the cause of the fire which destroyed it.

It is a curious fact that so firm in texture is the paper of a genuine Bank of England note that burning alone can hardly destroy it. The authorities have in a little glazed frame the remnants of a note which was in the great fire of Chicago. Though completely charred and black the paper still holds together, and the printing of the note is said to be sufficiently legible to establish its genuineness and to warrant its being cashed. There are some other notes at the Bank which were cashed after having gone down with the "Eurydice" a few years ago, and reduced to a little better than pulp. Indeed, the scraps and fragments which sometimes come into the Bank to be cashed have a really ludicrous appearance.

Female Highwaymen.

Two fashionably dressed women stopped a young man on the highway near Reading, Pennsylvania, the other night and demanded his money or his life. One clutched him by he throat, and the other pulled his hat over his eyes, while she searched his pockets. He was roughly handled until he determined to fight, even if they were women. He struck right and left, until he succeeded in escaping without his hat, but having lost no money. They denied pointing a pistol, but were held for assault.

A MARBLE WIDOW.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart's Isolation in Her Fifth Avenue Palace.

Alone in her marble palace lives the widow of A. T. Stewart. His remains, which are supposed to be resting beneath the magnigeent mausoleum of Garden City, are scarcely more secluded than is the personality of Mrs. Stewart.

The greater portion of the Stewart mansion is closed, dust gathers upon its painting and furniture, its blinds of white and gold shut out the exterior view, and save a small suite of rooms on the western corner, the mansion is practically deserted. There is something touching in her splendid isolation within call of the fashion, care, elegance, and bustling activity of a restless social world.

A lady with silvery grey hair, whose features are still clearly cut and bear the evidences of refinement, is Mrs. Stewart. Her eyes are yet undimmed. She stoops slightly. She is of kindly presence, although her features bear the traces of much suffering, and a habitual sternness of expression settles upon her features when in repose. Her face, when lit up with the interest of a passing topic, affords the observer a fair idea of what Mrs. Stewart was in her prime. With the aid of silver crutch-handled cane she can get about fairly. But there are times when the services of her personal attendant is much in request.

A WOMAN OF METHOD.

Mrs. Stewart is a woman of method. When able she rises by ten o'clock, and breakfasts usually alone. Her tasks are few and modest, and her rich but simple breakfast equipage contains the old fashioned meal of tea, dry toast, and some light, easily digested food, as chicken or fish. Wines she rarely touches, save toward evening, preparatory to retiring, between 9 and 10 o'clock, when a glass of port acts as a gentle stimulant to a night of peaceful repose.

But despite her long years of mourning, life has certain duties to be performed, and a business tact, inherited probably from her husband, is still characteristic in Mrs. Stewart's domestic habits.

There are certain pensioners to be looked after, accounts of personal expenditure to be investigated, letters to be answered, and old friends to be received. Besides all these, her signature has to be obtained to sundry business formalities that are indispensable. All this takes up more time than would at first appear.

COMBING HER HAIR.

One of her favorite pastimes, peculiar to many old people, is to indulge in the luxury of having her hair brushed. Her silver braids are long and fine, and though increasing years may have told upon her strength, time has added to, rather than detracted from the glory of her hair. This operation usually lasts for an hour or more, while her companion—sometimes it is a relative—reads from the newspapers, or from a religious book, as her fancies may incline.

Her moods are various and capricious. Ever-changing fancies are continually occurring to her mind. One day she may be bright, sanguine, and exceedingly pleasant, the next she may be plunged into utter despondency, and will refuse comfort from her most attached friends. When laboring under these morbid reflections she has been known to lie for hours upon her couch utterly alone.

Her husband's portrait hangs in her bedroom, protected by a small curtain. She will look at it for an hour at a time, and then again the curtain will remain tightly drawn for days.

Under some conditions her vitality is surprising, and her health, upon the whole, is good, considering the mental suffering she has undergone. Her palace is watched night and day, and to get to see Mrs. Stewart is one of the impossibilities to those who are not included among her warmest friends. —N.Y. Journal.

A Boy's Sermon that Staid by.

It was the first effort he had ever made to speak in public. It was in a union praise-meeting, following a great revival in a college town. The boy, blushing and agitated, yet wishing to add his word of advice and thanksgiving, began abruptly:

"My dear brothers and sisters, I hope you will all take hold; and when you get hold, keep hold."

The youth was so confused, that he repeated the same words over and over, apparently unable to stop, or to catch a new sentence. Some of the young people who had religion, but were not old enough to have pity or consideration, began to laugh, when a big-hearted man (none other man than Brother Ben. Bristow, of Covington) struck in with the always appropriate ejaculation, "Thank God!" and then with that great melodious voice of his, began singing —"Am I a Soldier of the Cross?"

Pending this inquiry the youthful disciple sank, red and perspiring, into his seat.

I am uncertain whether any honest effort is fruitless. That poor lad thought, no doubt, that that was a failure. I have often wondered if he ever tried again—whether he did "keep hold." The talk of the college professors and ministers of the evangelical churches assembled in that union meeting, have faded from my remembrance entirely, but the poor boy's wretched exhortation remains at least in one heart.

The flowers of rhetoric may decorate the gospel fabric, but add nothing to its strength, nor can the golden glint of man's æsthetic upholstery make more grateful the shadow of the great rock in a weary land.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

At the Dublin Exhibition a novel plan which was both amusing and attractive, was adopted, of selecting by ballot at each concert the music to be performed at the next. This has been imitated by the manager of the Glasgow Theatre, who has introduced the ballot principles in the selection of twelve comedies to be performed. It is a tribute to the genius of Ireland that, with a Scotch audience, Sheridan's "School for Scandal" carried the highest vote, and Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer," the second. Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" came third, and the "Comedy of Errors" fourth. The "Rivals" fifth. O'Keefe's "Wild Oats," which can only find a representative with us in the leading character, in these degenerate, days, in Mr. Lester Wallack, also found a place in the ballot. There was a great audience, upwards of 4,000 votes being cast.

PASSING PARAGRAPHS.

Many of the great English lawyers have been very uncultivated men. This was preeminently the case with Sir William Follett, the most brilliant advocate of the century. He knew nothing but law, to which he gave almost all his time when a student at Cambridge.

A correspondent of the Nebraska State Journal, describing a railroad he travelled on in Oregon says: "My fellow passenger raised an umbrella when we got on board, and said I had better raise mine. He was right. The puffing, wheezy old engine sent soot and water over us in a perfect shower (the cars were open). We got along, however, very well, and would have made the trip quite as quickly as we could have walked it if the train had not stopped about half way and waited half an hour for a passenger who wanted to finish his supper.

The German army is at the present time distributed over 304 garrisons, 39 of which have an effective of over 2,000 men. Berlin, with 17,813, and Metz, with 14,441, are the only two towns which have garrisons of over 10,000. The garrison of Strasburg numbers 8,968, that of Mayence, 7,712, that of Cologne 7,655, that of Coblentz 6,353, that of Konigsberg 6,383, and that of Madgeburg 6,068. The garisons of Potsdam (6,580) and Spandau (4,339) are so close to Berlin that 28,732 trooops could be concentrated upon the capital at a few hours notice.

In many English churches on the Sunday of coronation, the Russian national hymn was played as a voluntary, and in some few prayers were offered for the Emperor and Empress of Russia. It is understood that great efforts are about to be made by those members of the English Church who desire more inter-communion with the Eastern Church to bring about that result. By the exertions of the Bishops of Lincoln and Gibraltar a great deal more has been already effected in that direction than the general public—who are supremely ignorant as to the Greek Church—are aware of.

An almost incredible case of popular superstition has occurred in Prussia. In the village of Schonbeck, in the Province of West Prussia, the little daughter of a cabinet maker has been bedridden for three years. The father became persuaded that his daughter was bewitched by a woman who had occasionally given her apples and pears. He was advised that the patient would be cured if she drank some of the blood of the supposed witch. The poor woman was entrapped into visiting a place where some of the chief men of the commune were assembled to receive her. She was seized, one of her fingers pricked with a needle, and the blood given to the sick child. The participators in this outrage were summoned before a police magistrate, who sentenced them to imprisonment for three days.

Bad luck made a Boston man wish to die, but he was a firm believer in the Bible, and was aware of its mandate against suicide. He had heard it preached, too, that a death-bed repentance was sufficient to insure salvation. He made a careful study of this doctrine, consulted several clergymen (though without disclosing to them what he had in contemplation), and at length settled it in his own mind that the sinner who repented at the last moment was as sure of heaven as anyone who lived sanctified for years. Having settled that point to his own satisfaction, he sought a means of suicide which, while certain to kill, would leave him conscious long enough to make his peace with heaven. So he swallowed a deadly poison, and was taken to a hospital to die. "There he repented," says the narrator, "and he gave every indication that his contrition was sincere."

Cannibalism in Russia.

The Terskija Vedomosti reports a case which shows that the superstition attributing magical power to the eating of human flesh is not confined to the Australian aborigines. In the grave yard of the village of Naurusowa in the Naltshik district, the police noticed that the grave of a recently buried child was much disturbed. Suspicion fell on a man reputed to be a sorcerer. His hut was searched, and he was found sitting at the fire, on which was a pot simmering. He refused to answer any questions, but, on the adjoining bedroom being examined, a large portion of the body of the missing child was found hanging from a hook, and in a corner of the room were the skulls of several children.

The wretch, upon being interrogated as to where was the remaining portion of the child's body, pointed silently to the pot. His daughter, a miserable, starved girl, admitted, on examination, that the father used regularly to steal the bodies of little children, cook and eat the flesh and from the fat make ointments and medicine, which he gives as charms. He had threatened to kill and eat her if she ever gave information of his doings.—London Times.

MARKDALE, JUNE 28TH, 1883.

SIDEWALKS.

Our statute labor overseers have completed the sidewalk to the Railway crossing, making a first class substantial six feet walk, with cedar scantling and sleepers. It now remains for the R'y Co. to continue it to the station, which is very badly needed, and we sincerely hope they will do so forthwith. It is only about ten rods, would not cost much, and would be very highly appreciated by our citizens and the travelling public. Our station has recently been sending out from 20 to 25 cars of freight per day and a large passenger traffic besides, and we think the least the Co. can do is to make a respectable way of getting from the station to the village sidewalk.

PHRENOLOGY.

The science of Phrenology has very little opposition from intelligent and learned classes, and yet few fully appreciate its full value. The various professions and avocations of life are being filled, and we venture to say, in nine cases out of ten the young man starting out, or even his parents, have but a very remote idea of what particular business he is best suited for, and at what he will best succeed. We believe parents should endeavor to have a phrenological examination of their children before deciding what business in life they fit them for, and thus save in many instances years time together with needless expense. Experience is valuable, yet when many years, and perhaps the prime of life is spent in experementing as to what line of business we are best adapted, it becomes a very costly teacher.

IRISH LAKE PIC-NIC.

This annual festivity is looked forward to with anticipations of pleasure by the surrounding public, and to the present they have never been disappointed. On Thursday last the weather looked very discouraging in the morning but cleared up and a beautiful day followed. The roads were anything but good, owing to the continued wet weather previously, and the place being in the midst of a truly rural district where roads at the best are nothing to boast of, yet by twelve o'clock the enclosure on the north shore of the beautiful lake was well filled with pleasure seekers, horses, carriages, etc. A large platform having been erected for dancing, a large number enjoyed themselves immensely while Parks Bros. produced excellent music from the violin and flute. The dinner, which cost only ten cents, was of the very best the country could afford. A large number of fowl were demolished, one of which (a turkey) we understand weighed 29 lbs. when dressed. About 600 were served, while a great many came in the afternoon who did not dine.

Mr. J. Townsend, proprietor of the Grey Review, Durham and C. W. Rutledge, proprietor of the MARKDALE STANDARD being chosen candidates for the gold headed cane, which was offered as a present to the one receiving the greatest number of votes at 10cts each, the voting commenced and excited considerable interest, the idea being, Durham against Markdale, and after the lapse of about an hour's time the state of the poll was announced, resulting in a victory for Markdale by 105 of a majority. Father O'Connell of Mt. Forest then presented the cane, which is a beautiful ebony one with solid gold head, valued at $25, to the editor of the STANDARD, who expressed his sincere thanks to the committee who had the choosing of the candidates, and also to those who so cheerfully placed him in possession of the highly appreciated and valuable present. Mr. Townsend also thanked those who generously supported him and his town, and though not successful in the campaign, trusted that he would be successful in giving a good report of the pic-nic generally.

A gold cross was then voted on between Miss Ryan and Miss Tuohy, resulting in a victory for the former.

The prizes for athletic sports were as follows: Foot race, 1st Jas. McDougall; 2nd O. McCue. Hop, step and jump, 1st J. McCue; 2nd O'McCue. Putting stone, 1st Alex McMillan; 2nd Ronald Morrison.

Everything passed off quiet and orderly. Father Cassin, the Pastor, is very popular and deservedly so. His amiable disposition together with his integrity and business tact in managing affairs generally are valuable qualifications. The pic-nic was a grand success on the whole and all appeared well pleased with their day's recreation.

THE GREAT NORTHWEST.

The great increase in travel to the North-West has forced the "Ermous Albert Lea Route" to put upon its line magnificent Dining Cars, in which passengers will be served meals second in quality to no first-class hotel, for the small sum of seventy-five cents each.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, which controls this route, has always maintained a reputation for giving travelers first class meals on its Dining Cars, and in putting on this line the same class of cars, it fills a want that the travelling public will appreciate.

"The Albert Lea Route," is carrying a very large share of the Northwestern travel, and, although early in the season, has commenced to sell tourists' tickets to the various pleasure resorts in a volume sufficiently large to guarantee an immense summer traffic.

County Court & General Session

(From the C. S. Times,)

WEDNESDAY.

Brown vs. Annis et al.—This was an action of replevin to recover a horse which the plaintiff had bought from a man named Kay at Markdale, but which had been taken possession of by defendant who lives in Co. Ontario, on a chattel mortgage. The jury believed the chattel mortgage was not made in good faith, and at any rate was not registered in Grey, where the horses were. Verdict for plaintiff. Jas. Masson for plaintiff. J. McSweyn for defendant.

Nesbitt vs. Annis and Freebor vs. Annis, were similar cases to the last, respecting horses supposed to be covered by the same chattel mortgage. Verdict for plaintiff by consent in both cases. Jas. Masson for plaintiffs. J. McSweyn for defendant.

The Grand Jury brought in a true bill against John Hopps, for stealing a watch, and no bill against Thomas Burr, accused of stealing a money letter.

THURSDAY.

Queen vs. John Hopps.—Prisoner was tried for stealing a watch from Jas. Shea, at Markdale on the 24th May. Verdict guilty, and sentenced to three months in gaol. A. Frost for the Crown. S. J. Lane for defence.

Ramsay vs. Trout et al.—This was a case brought by John I. Ramsay of Sydenham against Trout & Jay of Meaford, for alleged unlawfull selling of his goods. It appears the defendants had an execution against plaintiff, under which the bailiff seized his goods, but as they were covered by chattel mortgage, he only sold the equity of redemption. This was bought by Trout & Jay, who then sold under it. Ramsay claimed that there was not sufficient notice of sale, but was non-suited by His Honor without going into evinence for defence. Creasor & Platt for plaintiff. W. D. Pollard for the defendant.

Gibbons vs. Larkin.—The plaintiff took a contract from defendant for supplying the stone for harbor works at Owen Sound, the specifications of which called for a hundred cords. When he had put in 60 cords he was told by Larkin that was enough. He now sued for the price of 40 cords, claiming that Larkin was paid for a 100 cords, and had told him he would be paid for whatever quantity the Government allowed. He was unable to show that there was any specific price or payment to Larkin for the stonework, which was included in the general contract, and was consequently non-suited by His Honor. Creasor & Platt for plaintiff. Jno. Creasor, Q. C., for defendant.

Merritt vs. Brinkman.—Action on account. Verdict for plaintiff $80, but without costs, on the ground that the suit ought to have been brought in Division Court. J. S. Wilson for plaintiff. Jas. Masson for defendant.

Macmillan vs. McMahon.—The plaintiff, who is a solicitor, sued defendant for a bill of costs. She claimed that she had paid him for all he had done. Verdict for defendant. S. J. Lane, Q. C., for plaintiff. John Creasor, Q. C., for defendant.

W. W. Stephens, druggist, of Meaford, appealed from the conviction of the Mayor's Court for selling liquor to a minor. The Jury, after hearing the evidence, deliberated for several hours and disagreed. J. S. Wilson for appellant. John Creasor, Q. C., for respondent.

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

BORN TO GOOD LUCK.

BY CHARLES READE.

I.

Patrick O'Rafferty was a small farmer in the County Leinster. He and his father before him had been yearly tenants to Squire Ormsby for fifty years on very easy terms.

Patrick—more uneasy than his sire—now and then pestered this Squire for a lease. Then the Squire used to say, "Well, if you make a point of it, I will have the land valued and a lease drawn accordingly." But this iniquitous proposal always shut O'Rafferty's mouth for a time. He was called in the village Paddy Luck; and certainly he had the luck to get into a good many fights and other scrapes, and to get out of them wonderfully. It was he set the name rolling; his neighbors did but accept it.

He professed certain powers akin to divination, and they were not generally ridiculed, for he was right one time in five, and that was enough, for credulity always forgets the usual and remembers the eccentric.

This worthy had a cow to sell, and drove her into the nearest fair. He put twelve pounds on her, and was laughed at. She was dry, and she was ugly. "Twelve pounds! Go along wid ye." "Never mind her," was Pat's reply. "I'm Paddy Luck, and it's meself that will sell the baste for twelve pounds, and divil a ha'-penny less." This was his proclamation all the morning. In the afternoon he condescended to ten pounds, just to oblige the community. At sunset he managed to get eight pounds, and a by-stander told him he was a lucky fellow.

"That is no news, thin," said he. It was dark, and he was tired; his home was twelve Irish miles off; he resolved to sleep in the town. In the meantime he went to a tavern and regaled his purchaser, drank, danced, daffed, showed his money, got drunk, and was robbed by one of the light-fingered gentry who prowl about a fair.

The consequence was that the next time he ordered liquor on a liberal scale—for he was one who treated semicircularly in his cups—he could not find a shilling to pay, and the landlord put him out into the street. He cooled himself at a neighboring pump, and went in search of gratuitous lodgings. The hard-hearted town did not provide these, so he walked out of it into sweeter air. He was not sick nor sorry. Quite the reverse. He congratulated himself on his good luck. "Sure, now," said he, "if I had sold her for twelve pounds, it's four pounds I'd be losing by that same bargain."

Some little distance outside the town he found a deserted hovel; there was no door, window, nor floor; but the roof was free from holes in one or two places, and there was a dry corner, and a heap of straw in it. Paddy thanked the stars for providing him with so complete and gratuitous a shelter, and immediately burrowed into the straw, and was about to drop asleep when the glimmer of a lantern shot in through the doorway, and voices muttered outside.

Patrick nestled deeper in the straw; he was a trespasser, and it seemed too late and yet too early for the virtues, charity included, to be afoot.

Two men came in with a sack, a spade, and a lantern: one of them lifted the lantern up and took a cursory glance round the premises. Patrick, whom the spade had set a-shivering, held his breath. Then the man put the lantern down, and his companion went to work and dug, not a grave, as panting Pat expected, but a big round hole.

This done, they emptied the sack; out rolled and tinkled silver salvers of all sizes, coffee-pots, tea-pots, forks, spoons, brooches, necklaces, rings,—a mine of wealth that glowed and glittered in the light of the lantern.

Patrick began to perspire as well as tremble. The men filled in the hole, stamped the earth firmly down, and then lighted their pipes and held a consultation. The question was how to dispose of these valuables. After some differences of opinion they agreed that one Barney was the fence they would invite to the spot, and if he would not give one hundred pounds for the spoil they would take it to Dublin. It transpired that Barney lived at some distance, but not too far to come to-morrow evening and inspect the booty. Then, if he would spring to their price, they would go home with him and receive the coin.

"My luck!" thought Patrick. "What need had they to light their pipes and chatter like two old women about such a trifle, without searching the straw first, the omadhauns!" The thieves retired, and lucky Pat went quietly to sleep.

He awoke in broad daylight, and strolled back into the town. He walked jauntily, for, if he had no money he possessed a secret. He was too Irish and too sly to go to a police office at once; his little game was to try and find out who had been robbed, and what reward they would give.

Meantime he had to breakfast off a stale roll given him by a baker out of charity. About noon he passed through a principal street, and lo! in a silversmith's shop was a notice, written very large:

"THIRTY GUINEAS REWARD."

"Whereas, these premises were broken into last night, and the following valuable property abstracted:"

Then followed an inventory a foot long.

"The above reward will be paid to any person who will give such information as may lead to the conviction of the thieves and the recovery of the stolen goods, or any considerable part thereof."

Patrick walked in and asked to see the proprietor. A little fussy man in a great state of agitation responded to that query.

"Are you in arnest now, sorr?" asked Pat.

"In earnest! Of course I am."

"What if a dacent poor boy like me was to find you the silver and thieves and all?"

"I'd give you the thirty guineas, and my blessing into the bargain."

"Maybe ye wouldn't like to give me my dinner an' all, by raison I'm just famishing with hunger?"

This proposal raised suspicion, and the proprietor asked his name.

"Patrick O'Rafferty. I'm a tenant to Squire Ormsby."

"I know him. Well, Patrick, I suppose you can give me some information. I'll risk the dinner anyway."

"Ah, well, sorr," said Patrick, "they say 'fling a sprat to catch a whale.' A lump-steak and a quart of ale is a favorite repast of mine; when I have had 'em I'll arn 'em, by the holy poker."

"Step into my back parlor, Mr. O'Rafferty," said the silversmith.

He then sent for the rump-steak very loud, and for a policeman in a whisper.

The steak came first, and was most welcome. When he had eaten it the modest O'Rafferty asked for a pipe and pot.

Whilst he smoked and sipped calmly the disguised policeman arrived, and was asked to examine him through a little window.

"Does he look like crime?" whispered the silversmith.

"No," said the policeman. "Calf-like innocence and impudence galore."

The jeweller asked O'Rafferty to step out. "Now, sir," said he, "you have had your dinner, and I don't grudge it you; but if this is a jest let it end here, for I am in sore trouble, and it would be a heartless thing to play on me."

"Och, hear to him!" cried Patrick, with a whine as doleful as sudden. "Did iver an O'Rafferty make a jest of an honest man's trouble, or ate a male off his losses? But what is a hungry man worth? I could not see how to do your work while I was famished, but now my belly is full, and my head fuller, glory be to God!"

"I don't know how it is," said the jeweller, aside to the detective, "he tells me nothing, and yet somehow he gives me confidence. But, Mr. O'Rafferty, do consider; time flies, and I'm no nearer my stolen goods. What is the first step we are to take?"

"The first step was to fill my belly; the next step is to find me—och, murther, it is a rarity!"

"Never mind," said the disgusted officer. "Find you what?"

"A policeman—that isn't a fool."

II.

This was a stinger, and so sudden; his hearers looked rather sheepish at him. It was the policeman who answered.

"If you will come to the station, I will undertake to find you that."

Patrick assented, and on the way they made friends; his companion revealed himself, and forgave the stinger, and Patrick, pleased with his good temper, let him into the plan he had matured while smoking his pipe and appearing to lose time. All Patrick stipulated was that he himself should be the person in command; and as he alone knew where the booty was, and was manifestly as crafty as a badger, this was cheerfully acceeded to. So, an hour before dusk, four fellows that looked like countrymen drove a cart full of straw up to the hovel, and made a big heap by adding it to what was there already.

Then two drove the cart back to the edge of the town, and put the horse up, and rejoined their companions in ambush, all but one, and he hid in a dry ditch opposite. They were all armed, and the outside watcher had a novel weapon—a powerful blue-light in the shape of a fat squib.

It is a dreary business waiting at night for criminals who may never come at all, or, if they do, may be desperate, and fight like madmen or wild-cats,

Eight o'clock came—nine—ten—eleven—twelve; the watchers were chilled and stiff, and Pat sleepy.

One of the policemen whispered to him: "They won't come to-night. Are you sure they have not been and taken up the swag?"

"Not sure; but I think not." The policeman growled and muttered something about a mare's nest.

"Hush!" said another.

"What!" in an agitated whisper.

"Wheels!"

Silence.

They all remained as still as death. The faint wheels, that would have been inaudible by day, rattled nearer and nearer. It was late for a bona fide traveller to be on the road. Would the wheels pass the hovel?

They came up fast; then they stopped suddenly. To the watchers everything was audible, and every sound magnified. When the drag stopped it was like a railway train pulling up. Men leaped out, and seemed to shake the ground. When three figures busted into the hovel it sounded like a rush of men. Then came a thrilling question. Would the thieves examine the premises before they looked for the booty? The chances were they would.

Well, they did not. They were in great anxiety too, but it took the form of hurry. They dug furiously, displayed the booty to Barney all in a hurry, and demanded their price.

"Now, then, one huudred pounds, or take take your last look at 'em."

"One hundred pounds!" whined Barney. "Can't be done."

"Very well; there's no time to bargain."

"I'll give eighty pounds. But I shall lose money by 'em."

"Blarney! They are worth a thousand. Here, Jem, put 'em up; we can do better in Dublin."

Barney whined and remonstrated, but ended by consenting to give the price.

The words were hardly out of his mouth when the hovel glared with a lurid fire, so vivid and penetrating that every crevice of it and the very cobwebs came out distinct.

The thieves yelled with dismay, and one ran away from the light, slap into the danger, and was dazzled again with opening bull's-eyes, and captured like a lamb. The other rushed blindfolded at the entrance, but his temple encountered a cold pistol, and a policeman immovable as a statue. He recoiled, and was at that moment of hesitation pinned from behind and handcuffed—click! As for Barney, from whom no fight was expected, he was allowed to clamber up the walls like a mouse in a trap, then tumble down, until the four-wheel they had come in was brought up by Paddy O'Rafferty. Then the thieves were bundled in and sat each of them between two honest men, and the fence was attached by the wrist to a policeman, who walked him to the same destination; but, like friend Virgil's bull, multa reluctantem,, hanging back in vain, and in vain bribing the silent, impenetrable Bobby.

Pat slept at the station, and next morning the jeweller gave his thirty guineas with a good heart, but omitted the blessing. Patrick whined dismally at this very serious omission, and the worthy little fellow gave it him with glistening eyes. "For," said he, "I'll own now the loss would have ruined me. I find by my books that they cost me thirteen hundred pounds." So then he blessed him solemnly, and Pat went home rejoicing. "I'll have more luck than ever now," said he. "I'll have all sorts of luck—good, bad and indifferent."

When he got home he told the story inaccurately, and like a monomaniac; that is to say, he suppressed all the fortitude and sagacity he had shown. These were qualities he possessed, so he thought nothing of them.

Luck and divination were what he prided himself on. His version ran thus: he had the luck not to sell his cow till night-fall, the still better luck to be robbed of his money, and compelled to sleep in the neighborhood. Then, thanks to his superlative luck, the Queen's jeweller had been robbed of silver salvers the size of the harvest-moon, two gallon tea-pots, pearls like hazel-nuts, and diamonds as big as broad beans; and seeing no other way to recover them, and hearing that the wise man of Gannachee was in the town, had given him a good dinner and his pipe, and begged him to use all his powers s aa seer; of all which the upshot was that he had put the police on the right track, and recovered the booty, and caged the thieves, and marched home with the reward.

In telling this romance he was careful to take out the thirty sovereigns and jingle them, and this musical appeal to the senses so overpowered the understandings of his neighbors that they swallowed the wondrous tale like spring water.

After this few were bold enough to resist his pretensions to luck and divination. He was often consulted, especially about missing property, and as he now and then guessed right, and sometimes had taken the precaution to hide the property himself, which materially increased his chances of finding it, he passed for a seer.

One fine day Squire Ormsby learned to his dismay that his pantry had been broken into and a mass of valuable plate taken. Mr. Ormsby was much distressed, not only on account of the value, but the length of time certain pieces had been in the family. He distrusted the police and publicity in these cases, and his wife prevailed on him to send for Patrick O'Rafferty.

That worthy came and heard the story. He looked at the lady and gentleman, and his self-deception began to ooze out of him. To humbug his humble neighbors was not difficult nor dangerous, but to deceive and then undeceive and disappoint his landlord was quite another matter.

He put on humility, and said this was a matter beyond him entirely. Then the Squire was angry, and said, bitterly. "No doubt he would rather oblige his neighbors, or a shopkeeper who was a stranger to him, than the man whose land had fed him and his for fifty years." He was proceeding in the same strain when poor Pat, with that dismal whine the merry soul was subject to occasionally, implored him not to murder him entirely with hard words; he would do his best.

"No man can do more," said Mr. Ormsby. "Now how will you proceed? Can we render you any assistance?"

Patrick said, humbly, and in a downcast way, he would like to see the place where the thieves got in.

He was taken to the pantry window, and examined it inside and out, and all the servants peeped at him.

"What next?" asked the Squire.

Then Patrick inwardly resolved to get a good dinner out of this business, however humiliating the end of it might be. "Sorr," said he, "ye'll have to give me a room all to myself, and a rump-steak and onions; and after that your servants must bring me three pipes and three pints of home-brewed ale. Brewers' ale hasn't the same spiritual effect on a seer's mind."

The order was given, and set the kitchen on fire with curiosity, Some disbelieved his powers, but more believed them, and cited the jeweller's business and other examples.

When the first pipe and pint were to go to him a discussion took place between the magnates of the kitchen who should take it up. At last the butler and the housekeeper insisted on the footman taking it. Accordingly he did so.

Meantime Patrick sat in state digesting the good food. He began to feel a physical complacency, and to defy the future; he only regretted that he had confined his demand to one dinner and three pots. To him in this frame of mind entered the footman with pipe and pint of ale as clear as Madeira.

Says Patrick, looking at the pipe, "This is the first of 'em."

The footman put the things down rather hurriedly and vanished.

"Humph," said Pat to himself, "you don't seem to care for my company."

He sipped and smoked, and his mind worked.

The footman went to the butler with a scared face, and said, "I won't go near him again; he said I was one."

"Nonsense!" said the butler; "I'll take up the next."

He did so. Patrick gazed in his face took the pipe, and said, sotte voce,

"This is the second;" then, very regretfully, "Only one more to come."

The butler went away much discomposed, and told the housekeeper.

"I can't believe it," said she. "Anyway, I'll know the worst."

So in due course she took up the third pipe and pint, and wore propitiatory smiles.

"This is the last of 'em," said Patrick, solemnly, and looked at the glass.

The housekeeper went down all in a flutter. "We are found out, we are ruined," said she. "There is nothing to be done now but— Yes there is; we must buy him, or put the comether on him before he sees the master,"

Patrick was half dosing over his last pipe when he heard a rustle and a commotion, and lo! three culprits on their knees to him. With that instinctive sagacity which was his one real gift—so he underrated it—he said, with a twinkling eye:

"Och, thin, you'v come to make a clane brist of it, the three Chrischin vartues and haythen graces that ye are. Ye may save yourselves the throuble. Sure I know all about it."

"We see you do. Y'are wiser than Solomon," said the housekeeper. 'But sure ye wouldn't abuse your wisdom to ruin three poor bodies like us?"

"Poor!" cried Patrick. "Is it poor ye call yourselves? Ye ate and drink like fighting cocks; y'are clothed in silk and plush and broadcloth, and your wages is all pocket-money and pin-money. Yet ye must rob the man that feeds and clothes ye."

"It is true! it is true!" cried the butler.

"He spakes like a priest," said the woman. "Oh, alarna! don't be hard on us; it is all the devil's doings; he timpted us. Oh! oh! oh!"

"Whist, now, and spake sinse," said Patrick, roughly. "Is it melted?"

"It is not."

"Can you lay your hands on it?"

"We can, every stiver of it. We intended to put it back."

"That's a lie," said Patrick firmly, but not in the least reproachfully. "Now look at me, the whole clan of ye, male and faymale. Which would you rather do—help me find the gimcracks, every article of 'em, or be lagged and scragged and stretched on a gibbet and such like iligant divarsions?"

Tney snatched eagerly at the plank of safety held out to them, and from that minute acted under Mr. O'Rafferty's orders.

"Fetch me another pint," was the first bequest.

"Ay, a dozen, if ye'll do us the honor to drink it."

"To the devil wid your blarney! Now tell the master I'm at his service."

"Oh, murder! what will become of us? Would you tell him, after all?"

"Ye omadhauns, can't ye listen at the dure and hear what I tell him?"

With this understanding Squire Ormsby was ushered in, all expectation.

"Yer honor," said Patrick, "I think the power is laving me. I am only able to see the half of it. Now, if you plaze, would you like to catch the thieves and lose the silver, or to find the silver and not find the thieves?"

"Why, the silver, to be sure."

"Then you and my lady must go to mass to-morrow morning, and when you come back we will look for the silver, and maybe, if we find it, your honor will give me that little bit of a lease."

"One thing at a time, Pat; you haven't found the silver yet."

At nine o'clock next morning Mr. and Mrs. Ormsby returned, from mass, and found O'Rafferty waiting for them at their door. He had a long walking-stick with a shining knob, and informed them, very solemnly, that the priest had sprinkled it for him with holy water.

Thus armed, he commenced the search. He penetrated into the out-houses and applied his stick to chimneys and fagots and cold ovens, and all possible places. No luck.

Then he proceeded to the stable-yard, and searched every corner; then into the shrubbery; then into the tool-house. No luck. Then on the lawn. By this time there were about thirty at his heels.

Disgusted at this fruitless search, Patrick apostrophized his stick: "Bad cess to you, y'are only good to burn. Ye keep turning away from every place; but ye don't turn to anything whatever. Stop a bit! Oh, holy Moses! what is this?"

As he spoke, the stick seemed to rise and point like a gun. Patrick marched in the direction indicated, and after a while seemed to be forced by the stick into a run. He began to shout excitedly and they all ran after him. He ran full tilt against a dismounted water-barrel, and the end of the stick struck it with such impetus that it knocked the barrel over, then flew out of Patrick's hand to the right, who himself made a spring the other way, and stood glaring with all the rest at the glittering objects that strewed the lawn, neither more nor less than the missing plate.

Shouts and screams of delight. Everybody shaking hands with Patrick, who, being a consummate actor, seemed dazzled and mystified, as one who had succeeded far beyond his expectations.

To make a long story short, they all settled it in their minds that the thieves had been alarmed and hidden the plate for a time, intending to return and fetch it away.

Mr. Ormsby took the seer into his study, and gave him a piece of paper stating that for a great service rendered to him by Patrick O'Rafferty he had, in the name of him and his, promised him undisturbed possession of the farm so long as he or his should farm it themselves, and pay the present rent.

Pat's modesty vanished at the Squire's gate; he bragged up and down the village, and henceforth nobody disputed his seership in those parts.

But one day the Sassenach came down with his cold incredulity.

A neighbor's estate, mortgaged up to the eyes, was sold under the hammer, and Sir Henry Steele bought it, and laid some of it down in grass. He was a breeder of stock. He marked out a park wall, and did not include a certain little orchard and a triangular plot. The seer observed, and applied for them. Sir Henry, who did his own business, received the application, noted it down, and asked him for a reference. He gave Squire Ormsby.

"I will make inquiries," said Sir Henry, "Good morning."

He knew Ormsby in London, and when he became his neighbor the Irish gentleman was all hospitality. One day Sir Henry told him of O'Rafferty's application, and asked about him.

"Oh," said Ormsby, "that is our seer."

"Your what?"

"Our wise man, our diviner of secrets; and some wonderful things he has done."

He then related the loss of his plate, and its supernatural recovery.

The Sassenach listened with a cold incredulous eye and a sardonic grin.

Then the Irishman go hot and accumulated examples.

Then the Sassenach, with the obstinacy of his race, said he would put these pretensions to the test. He had picked out of the various narratives that this seer was very fond of a good dinner, and pretended it tended to enlighten his mind; so he laid his [illegible] cordingly.

At his request Patrick was informed [illegible] next Tuesday at one o'clock, if he chose submit to a fair test of his divining [illegible] the parcel of land he had asked for [illegible] be let him on easy terms.

Patrick assented jauntily. But in [illegible] secret soul he felt uneasy at having to [illegible] counter this Sassenach gentleman. So [illegible] was the fortunate possessor of what [illegible] pleased to call "a nasty glittering eye," [illegible] over that eye Pat doubted his ability [illegible] draw t' wool as he had done over [illegible] orbs.

However, he came up to the scratch [illegible] a man. After all, he had nothing to [illegible] this time, and he vowed to submit to [illegible] that was not preceded by a good dinner. [illegible] was ushered into Sir Henry Steele's [illegible] and there he found that gentleman and [illegible] Ormsby. One comfort, there was a [illegible] laid, and certain silver dishes on the [illegible] and in the fender.

"Well, Mr. O'Rafferty," said his host, [illegible] believe you like a good dinner?"

"Thrue for you, sorr," said Pat.

"Well, then, we can combine business [illegible] with pleasure; you shall have a good dinner."

"Long life to your honor!"

"I cooked it for you myself."

"God bless your honor for your consideration."

"You are to eat the dinner first, and [illegible] just tell me what the meat is, and the [illegible] of land is yours on easy terms."

Patrick's confidence rose. "Sure, this [illegible] is a fair bargain," said he.

The dishes were uncovered. There [illegible] vegetables cooked most deliciously; [illegible] meat was a chef-d'œuvre; a sort of rich [illegible] out done to a turn, and so fragrant that [illegible] very odor made the mouth water.

Patrick seated himself, helped himself [illegible] and took a mouthful; that mouthful had [illegible] double effect. He realized in one and the [illegible] same moment that this was a more heavenly [illegible] compound than he had ever expected to taste [illegible] upon earth, and that he could not and never [illegible] should divine what bird or beast he was [illegible] eating. He looked for the bones: there [illegible] were none. He yielded himself to despairing [illegible] enjoyment. When he had nearly cleaned the [illegible] plate he said that even the best-cooked meat [illegible] was none the worst for a quart of good ale to [illegible] wash it down.

Sir Henry Steele rang a bell and ordered a [illegible] quart of ale.

Patrick enjoyed this too, and did not [illegible] ry; he felt it was his last dinner in this [illegible] house, as well as his first.

The gentlemen watched him and gave him [illegible] time. But at last Ormsby said, "Well, Patrick—"

Now Patrick, whilst he sipped, had been [illegible] asking himself what line he had better take, [illegible] and he had come to a conclusion creditable [illegible] to that sagacity and knowledge of human [illegible] nature he really possessed and understood [illegible] accordingly. He would compliment the gentlemen on their superior wisdom, and [illegible] he could not throw dust in such eyes as [illegible] theirs; then he would beg them not to make [illegible] his humble neighbors as wise as they were, [illegible] but let him still pass for a wise man in the [illegible] parish, whilst they laughed in their superior [illegible] sleeves. To carry out this he impregnated [illegible] his brazen features with a world of comic [illegible] humility.

"And," said he, in cajoling accents, "if [illegible] your honors, the old fox made many a turn, [illegible] but the dogs were too many for him at [illegible] last."

What more of self-depreciation and cajolery he would have added is not known for Sir Henry Steele broke in loudly, "Good heavens! Well, he is an extraordinary man. It was an old dog-fox I cooked for him."

"Didn't I tell you!" cried Ormsby, delighted at the success of his countryman.

"Well, sir," said Sir Henry, whose emotions seldom lasted long, "a bargain's a bargain. I let you the orchard and field for—let me see—you must bring me a stoat, a weasel, and a polecat every year. I mean to get up the game."

Mr. O'Rafferty first stared stupidly, then winked cunningly, then blandly absorbed laudation and land; then retired invoking solemn blessings; then, being outside, executed a fandango, and went home on wings; from that hour the village could not hold him. His speech was of accumulating farms at peppercorn rents, till a slice of the country should be his. To hear him, he could hear, he could see through a deal board, and luck was his monopoly. He began to be envied, and was on the way to be hated, when, confiding in his star, he married Norah Blake, a beautiful girl, but a most notorious vixen.

Then the unlucky ones forgave him a great deal; for sure wouldn't Nora revenge them? Alas! the traitress fell in love with her husband after marriage, and let him mould her into a sort of angelic duck.

This was the climax. So Paddy Luck is now numbered amongst the lasting institutions of ould Ireland (if any).

May he live till the skirts of his coat knock his brains out, and him dancing an Irish fling to "the wind that shakes the barley!"—Harper's Magazine.

They asked Mme. X. how old she was. "Thirty-two." "Why, last year you were 33!" "Yes, but I am now like an army which finds it difficult to hold its position, so I retreat."

The coronation dress of the Empress Marie Feodrovna was of drap d'argent, and cost $5,000. Her crown, however, which was originally made for Catherine II, is valued at one and a quarter million of pounds. In the Emperor's sceptre is the famous Orloff diamond. Its history is strange. It and the Koh-i-noor once formed the eyes of a Hindoo idol. It then passed into the possession of the Great Mogul, and, after many vicissitudes, eventually came into the hands of an astute Armenian, who sold it to Count Alexis Orloff, who, in his turn, disposed of it to the Emperor Paul I. for £90,000 in cash, an annuity of £4,000, and a patent of nobility. The Orloff diamond weighs 193 carats; the Koor-i-noor, in its present state, only 153. The famous Pitt diamond, terward know as the Regent of France, was sold by Gov. Pitt, grandfather of the Earl of Chatham, to the Regent Duke d'Orleans for £130,000. It was in the state sword of Napoleon, and formed a portion of the Prussian loot of Waterloo. The Prussians have it still.

Apaches in Field and Camp.

The rate of speed attained by the Apaches in marching is about an even four miles an hour on foot or not quite fast enough to make a horse trot. They keep this up for about fifteen miles, at the end of which distance, if water be encountered and no enemy be sighted, they congregate in bands of from ten to fifteen each, hide in some convenient ravine, smoke cigarettes, chat and joke and stretch out in the sunlight, basking like the negroes of the South. If they want to make a little fire they kindle one with matches, it they happen to have any with them; if not, the rapid twirl between the palms of a bard, round stick, fitting into a circular hole in another stick of softer fibre, will bring fire in forty-five seconds.

The scouts explained through interpreters that they paint the face to prevent the hot winds from blistering it; for this purpose they make use of antelope blood, or the juice of the roasted "mescal" (century plant).

The short morning rest of the Apaches was broken by the shrill cry of "Choddee! Choddee!" (Antelope! Antelope!) and far away on the left the dull "slump! slump!" of the rifles told that the Apaches on that flank were getting fresh meat for the evening meal. Ten carcasses showed that they were not the worst of shots. When the command reached camp these restless, indefatigable nomads built in a trice all kinds of rude shelter; those who had the army "dog tents" put them up on frameworks of willow or cottonwood saplings; other, less fortunate, improvised domiciles of branches, covered with grass, or of stone and boards and pieces of gunnysacks. Before these were finished smoke curled gracefully toward the sky from crackling embers, in front of which, transfixed on wooden spits, were the heads, hearts and livers of several of the victims of the afternoon's chace. Another addition to the "spolia optima" was a cottontail rabbit, run down by these fleet-footed Bedouins of the Southwest. Turkeys and quail, it is asserted by those who know, are caught in the same manner, and your correspondent hasn't a doubt of the accuracy of the statement; only he didn't see any such capture on the march herein described. Meantime a couple of scouts are making bread, the light, thin "tortillas" of the Mexicans, baked quickly in a pan, and not bad eating. Two others are fraternallly occupied in preparing their bed for the night. Grass is pulled out by handfuls, laid upon the ground and covered with one blanket, another serving as cover. These Indians, with scarcely an exception, sleep with their feet pointed towards little fires, which they claim are warm, while the big ones built by the American soldiers are so hot that they drive people away from them and besides attract the attention of any lurking enemy. At the foot of this bed an Apache is playing upon a home-made "fiddle," fabricated from the stock of an American aloe. It has four strings and produces a sound like the wail of a cat with her tail caught in a fence; but the noble red man likes the music. Enchanted snd stimulated by the concord of sweet sounds, a party of six is playing fiercly at the Mexican game of "Monte," the cards employed being of native manufacture, of horse hide, covered with barbarous figures and well worthy of a place in any museum of curiosities.

The cooking is by this time ended, and the savages, with genuine hospitality, invite the Americans near them to join in their feast. It is not conducive to the appetite to glance at the dirty paws which are tearing the bread and meat into small fragments; bnt one is not obliged to look at such trivial details if he does not want to. The meat is tender and juicy, and the bread might have been worse. The coffee is strong and not badly made. The Apaches nearest the Americans seem to think it incumbent upon them to explain everything as the meal progresses. They say, "This (pointing to the coffee) is tudishishl (black water)," and "this is pan" (the Spanish word for bread, adopted by the tribe). Hunger being satisfied the Americans withdraw, greatly pleased by the unaffected courtesy and good will of their savage allies.

All this time vedettes and scouts have been posted, commanding every possible line of approach. The Apache dreads surprise; it is his own favorite mode of destroying an enemy, and knowing what he himself can do he ascribes to his enemy, no matter how insignificant may be his numbers, the same daring, recklessness, agility and subtlety possessed by himself.—Correspondence New York Herald.

The Social Character of Industry.

Industry is essentially social. No man can improve either himself or his neighbor without neighborly help, and to better the world is to set the world to work together. Every useful invention has been carried out and perfected by the co-operation of many minds, or by the successive applications of varied genius to the same object age after age. The mechanic must aid the philosopher, or he must stand still in his demonstrations; and the philosopher must aid the mechanic, or he will work and work without wisdom. The astronomer needs the telescope, and the chemist his material and apparatus. The sciences hang on the arts, and the arts on the sciences.

Ivory is worth $5,000 a ton.

Flying Over the Snow.

A Norwegian snow shoe is made out of a pine board, some ten feet long and four inches wide. The forward ends, having been steamed, are curved upward, as are sled-runners. The bottom of the shoe, if it is a good one, is slightly gouged out, making a wide, shallow groove, with sharp edges. There is a stout strap across the middle of the shoe, which makes an arch, into which the toe of the boot is inserted. A little back of the strap is a block of leather, fitting under the instep. This block prevents the foot from slipping backward on the shoe when it is icy. A staff some six feet long is carried in the hands. This is a brake and a rudder. The movement is a sliding one. The shoe must not be lifted, but dragged along by the toes of the foot. In going up hill the shoe is lifted slighly and set down with a slap, to drive it into the snow, so as to prevent it slipping backward. In going down hill the rider stands erect and slides. He fairly flies between the trees. The shoes are easy to guide when one is familiar with their use. The sharp edges of the grooves catch on the snow as skates on ice. It occasionally happens that they become unmanageable in going down hill, and there is danger of striking a tree and breaking the shoe (a most serious accident when the snow lies four or five feet deep through the forest), or of the rider breaking his head, a matter of less account. The only thing to do when the shoes become unmanageable is to spread your legs and fall backward. A good snow-shoer instinctively protects his shoes and hangs on to them, as a civil engineer protects his transit when he falls. When the snow is in good condition there is no more exhilarating sport than snowshoeing in the highlands. The cold air is bracing. The blood flows freely. There is a little danger, just enough to spice the sport. You climb a high hill slowly, and breathe deeply on the summit. The descent is grand. The trees seem to tear by you. The wind whistles through your hair. You fairly scream with the excess of physical enjoyment. But suppose the snow is soft and sticky. Ah! well, stay at home! It was sticky when I entered the hills. Three, four, six inches of snow packed solidly under each shoe. The weight was enormous. The shoes could not be slid over the snow, and the sliding motion changed to the orthodox walking step. As each shoe was wearily lifted it had to be struck a sharp b'ow with the staff to loosen the encumbering snow. Tap, tap, tap, tap with the club-like staff at each step. The ascent of hills was hard work, the descent was laborious, and on the levels the snowshoeing was heartbreaking. There was no shouting, no sliding, no excitement. It was a solemn trip. I was seven hours in walking eleven miles, a distance that should have been made in three. Never before have I been so utterly exhausted, not even by a forced march in the Army of the Potomac. My clothing was as wet as though I had been in water.—Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

Candid thoughts are alway valuable.

A simple flower may be shelter for a troubled soul from the storms of life

Better a soft heart and an iron hand, than an iron heart and a soft hand.

To think clearly and well is the first step to knowing anything, and, until that has been taken, all others are useless. Equally in the work we perform, in the business we manage, in the various duties of domestic, social, and political life, and in the knowledge we gain or the opinions we hold, is the art of thinking well essential.

Two persons who have chosen each other out of all the species, with a design to be each others comfort and entertainment, have in that action, bound themselves to be good-humored, affable, discreet, forbearing, patient and joyful, with respect to each other's frailties and perfections, to the end of their lives.

It is a most fearful fact to think of, that in every heart there is some secret spring that would be weak at the touch of temptation, and that is liable to be assailed. Fearful, and yet salutary to think of, for the thought may serve to keep our moral nature braced. It warns us that we can never stand at ease, or lie down in the field of life, without sentinels of watchfulness and campfires of prayer.

Earn your own bread, and see how sweet it will be! Work, and see how well you will be! Work, and see how cheerful you will be! Work, and see how independent you will be! Work, and see how happy your family will be! –for, before you know where you are, instead of repining at Providence, you will find yourself offering up thanks for all the numerons blessings you enjoy.

Deal very gently with those who are on the downhill of life. Your own time is coming to be where they now are. You, too, are "stepping westward." Soothe the restlessness of age by amusement, by consideration, by non-interference, and by allowing plenty of occupation to fall into the hands that long for it. But let it be of their own choosing, and cease to order their ways for them as though they were children.

Let age, not envy, draw wrinkles on thy cheeks; be content to be envied, but envy not. Emulation may be plausible, and indignation allowable, but admit no treaty with that passion which no circumstance can make good. A displacency at the good of others because they enjoy it, though not unworthy of it, is an absurd depravity sticking fast into corrupted nature, and often too hard for humility and charity, the great suppressors of envy. This surely is a lion not to be strangled but by Hercules himself, or the highest stress of our minds, and an atom of that Power which subdueth all things unto itself.

Near Bozeman, on the N.P.R.R., is a curve which if prolonged would make a circle 600 feet in diameter. This is a very sharp curve, as 720 is the smallest diameter deemed safe.

In 1868 England furnished 106,810 soldiers, Scotland 17,011, and Ireland 55,583 to the Army. The Irish contingent was therefore a little more than one half of the English, and the Scotch something less than a sixth. In 1882 England furnished 124,434 soldiers, Scotland 13,723, and Ireland 36,945. Here the proportion borne by the Irish contingent to the English is between a third and a fourth, while Scotland supplied less than a ninth of the number raised south of the Tweed.

FOR THE

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

Society's Spoiled Daughters.—The Belle of the Ball.—In the Breakers.—Chit-Chat.

Spoiled Daughters of Society.

Perhaps the most complete form of slavery to be seen in New York, writes "Gath," is slavery to one's daughters. All literature has paid homage to woman, but in our age practical life does it. The New York wealthy man has a daughter or two. He pays but little attention to them while they are children, but it suddenly occurs to him that they are growing beautiful. His wife is sure of this fact, and she begins to dress the girls while they are still children in all the elegances of princesses. They are sent to dancing school, to riding school, to the first seminary, and are put in the opera box, allowed to know what is going on at all the theatres, and carried to the watering places, and before they know anything of their own country they are sent to Europe, where, as my friend the consul, who has just arrived, says he has seen girls not seventeen years of age provided with wardrobes of fifteen to thirty silk dresses, with hose of variegated silk, diamonds in their ears, and everything that life ought to yield toward its termination they are satiated with upon the very threshold. With fine food and wine their complexions become elegant; they are seldom away from the dentist's a week having their teeth fixed, the most cosmopolitan society is introduced to them, and they look down with indifference upon boys of their own age, or if they marry by an act nature, soon upbraid their husbands for not keeping up the luxury their parents spoiled them with. A friend who has spent many years in Europe tells me that the freedom allowed the daughters of American parents is the astonishment and horror of that continent. American girls are known wherever they appear by their sumptuous attire on the streets, their delicate shoes, the adoration paid them by their parents, and they are brought up beautiful enough and worthless enough to be at once the temptation and the ruin of any young man who may take them to his arms.

The Belle of the Ball.

The correspondent of the London News, writing from Moscow of the grand coronation festivities, says: "The belle of the ball after the Empress was certainly Countess de Beauharnais, sister of the late General Skobeleff, not an absolute beauty, but one of those big-eyed, dark-haired, attractive faces, with a marvellous figure, for whom men commit follies and women invent scandal. This lady was dressed in a Russian dress, the cut of which dates from early in the sixteenth century. It was low off the shoulders, with long, hanging sleeves plaited to the elbow, with a pointed stomacher, and skirt opening beneath over the under petticoat. The fabric, heavily brocaded and embroidered, looked like chased metal, as its long train fell around her feet in singular folds. Her kakoschnik was festooned with pearls, diamonds, and huge round emeralds; while round the entire corsage pearls and emerald medallions set off her pretty shoulders to perfection. A simple veil of tulle was fastened with gold plaques behind the tiara. Other costumes were equally attractive, without being so perfect in ensemble. White satin and deep black furs, maroon brocade over cloth of silver, embroidered in Byzantine patterns of every line, pale grey moire trimmed with rare lace, furs of every rarity, but above all parures of jewels eclipsing every court in Europe or Asia. I never imagined there were so many enormous emeralds above ground, while diamonds in tiaras, riveres, collars and monograms at last seemed numberless."

Girls in the Breakers.

Did you ever sit on one of the "grand stands" at Coney Island and see the girls in fancy stockings wade in till the puny surf just about wet the tops of them—the stockings, please remember—and then hop up and down, clinging to the ropes and yelping? Well, that is what you don't see at the unheard of bathing places I am telling you about. You would be surprised, writes a New York correspondent, at the number of girls who are expert and daring swimmers—Murray Hill daughters of from 15 to 20 summers, who walk coolly down to the breakers, follow out the receding sweep of water till they meet an incoming "roller," then poise themselves on tip-toe, stretch out their brown arms above their heads, and plunge headlong into the wall of water just as it is about to break and dash upon them. With a seething sound the crest of the wave shoots upwards, combs over gracefully, thunders down upon the beach, and goes back with a roar, and Miss Murray Hill is seen floating at her ease out beyond the line of breakers. I saw her when she had been venturesome enough to do just that thing while the tide was running out with unusual force. The breaker had given her a hard tussle when she went through it, and she had turned to swim in; but the outward current was too strong for her, and, though doing her best, she was being carried farther and farther from land. Did she yell and swallow salt water and strangle and sink? Not a bit of it; she raised one hand out of the water to show that she needed assistance, flopped over on her back, spread out her arms and lay still as a mouse, with her precious sunburnt nose barely above the water, letting the tide have its own way with her. In one minute more a couple of stalwart swimmers were at her side with a plank and line. Then she rested her arms on the plank and was hauled in smiling for which service she quietly said she was much obliged.

Chit-Chat.

When a school-girl becomes toned down, isn't she an ex-pert.

A woman in Mexico is 115 years old. Can any member of the corps de ballet beat this?

The Shah of Persia has become a raving maniac. We always said that one wife was enough for any man.

Cincinnati claims a dog that is so sensitive-minded that he will howl in the most sorrowful manner when he sees a brunette woman go past with a red bow at her throat.

"I am saturated to the epidermis," said a high school girl, throwing her gum-boots into the corner. "I don't wonder at that," replied her mother; "they give you such hard lessons at school."

Professor to a young lady student—"Your mark is very low, and you have only just passed." Young lady—"Oh, I am so glad." Professor, surprised—"Why?" Young lady—"I do so love a tight squeeze!"

"Do you believe that a women nowadays would die for the object of their love?" asked a bachelor friend. "I don't know whether she'd die or not," answered the benedict, "but I've known her to go wild if the trimming didn't suit her."

"My dear," said Rattler at the tea-table, looking up from his evening paper; "this French-China trouble looks serious." "Yes," answered Mrs. R., "Bridget broke the handle off the sugar-bowl to-day, but I didn't think you would notice it so soon."

Two Marseillais are congratulating themselves upon their physical advantages. "I," says one of them—"I cannot walk along the street without all the ladies turning their heads." "I," replied the other, "am obliged to eat garlic, to prevent them throwing their arms about my neck!"

"I have been married for several weeks, and my husband and I cannot decide whether we should retain our old love-letters or burn them. What would you advise?" Mrs. C.: "Put them in a pasteboard box in the servant's room. A supply of old letters has been known to keep a girl contented in one place for three months at a time."

Congratulating the Czar.—It is a cheerful reminiscence to bring to mind just now that immediately after his coronation, which took place under the most happy auspices, the late Czar Alexander II. asked one of the maids of honor in attendance how she enjoyed the ceremonies. "Oh, so much, your majesty," she replied, "I hope we shall have another soon."

Are Angels Sleepy?

During the progress of an address on so-called psychological science, recently delivered by the Rev. Mr. Hopps, the reverend gentleman put forth a new and untenable theory with regard to angels. In dealing with the most serious and sublime of all subjects, that of a future life, he is reported to have said that "if man existed at all after the incident of death, it would not be as a sleepy angel, but as the same man, though elevated by freedom from the body." It would not be profitable to follow the reverend gentleman through all the mazes of his speculation; but it may be pointed out that there is no warranty whatsoever, sacred or profane, for the assumption that angels are somnolent. Michael, the only archangel mentioned in scripture, is always described in his military capacity. In the whole seven or nine legion of angels—the number is differently given by the authorities—wakefulness and activity are the charactristics most insisted on. In the Apocraphal "Book of Enoch" Michael is made to preside over virtue and to command the nations; Raphael attends to the spirits of men; Uriel has under his cares the affairs of clamor, and Gabriel oversees paradise and the cherubim. A great many of the curious notions prevalent on the topic of angels are derived from the legends of the early church, and not a few from the writings of the English Protestant poet, John Milton. Angels have been described as having ranks and orders and systems of instruction the same as an earthly army; and a famous Spanish Jesuit declares that the angels dwelling in paradise have no houses, but, arrayed in women's habits, they go about from one part to another "for diversity." Indeed, it would be difficult to find in the entire speculative literature of the subject, native and foreign, any justification for the extraordinary statement that the angels are sleepy.—London Telegraph.

The Etiquette of Marriage.

According to Honore de Balzac, only two kinds of women are permitted to make advances to men—to take that "first step" which, after all, costs very little. The women specially excepted from the general rule are queens and actresses; and, with all due respect for the throne and for the stage, it must be admitted that members of these two privileged classes have, in many cases, profited largely by the permission accorded to them. Queens and actresses—meaning, in the latter case, queens of the theatre, and not the whole crowd of women and men who have entered upon the dramatic career—are surrounded by homage; so that what on the part of other women would be active selection is but passive selection on theirs. They are in no way exposed to the ignominy of a rebuff. A queen, moreover, is strictly forbidden by etiquette to receive an unbidden declaration of love, or a spontaneous invitation of any kind. From a dancing partner to a partner for life she must signify her choice. As much cannot be said of the prima donna or the great tragic or comic actress. But, whether it should be so or not, the queens of the stage, while exposed to as fierce a light as that which "beats upon a throne," stand equally with the enthroned ones above the reach of conventional etiquette.

The Character of Sex.

So far as sex is concerned, one notable peculiarity in the character of the woman is that she is capricious and coy, and has less straightforwardness than the man, and there can be little doubt as to the origin of the peculiarity. The willy-nilly disposition of the female in matters of love is as apparent in the butterfly as in the man, and most have been continuously favored from the earliest stages of animal evolution down to the present time. It is the factor in the great theory of sexual selection that corresponds to the insistness and directness of the male. Coyness and caprice have in consequence become a heritage of the sex, together with a cohort of allied weaknesses, and petty deceits that men have come to think venial and even amiable in woman, but which they would not tolerate among themselves.—Nature.

Mrs. Augusta Smith of St. Louis, Mo., is one of the lightest sleepers in the State. She is awake twenty-two hours out of every day on the average, and when she does slumber it is scarcely more than a doze, during which she is partially conscious of all that is going on around her. She is strong and healthy, with a good appetite, and not particularly nervous.

THE RATTLESNAKE.

The Habits and Disposition of a dreaded Reptile.—Its Power of Fascination.

In favorable localities rattlesnakes occur in amazing plenty, and the stories to be heard in every state of "dens," where they writhe in countless numbers and dreadful intimacy have some foundation. De Kay cites an instance where two men in Warren County, New York, about 1840, slaughtered 1,100 rattlesnakes in three days on the eastern side of Tongue mountain. In 1877 a farmer killed 76 massaguts in a cranberry marsh of Crawford County, Ohio, where are still harbored many serpents disappearing elsewhere. Some swamps and cane brakes in the far south swarm with the dreaded cottonmouth, and local species occur in thousands on parts of the plains and Rocky mountains, particularly in the tufa waters of the warm springs in Utah. But perhaps the nearest approach to the "den" of the sensational picture is an island in Pyramid lake, where during the warm months "it is absolutely dangerous to walk about those parts of the island where they are colonized."

This animal is easily killed or disabled, however, and has in man an implacable enemy not only directly but in many indirect ways, yet there are few localities favourable to him where he has been exterminated. You can find rattlesnakes in plenty, for example, within five miles of the centre of New Haven. It is doubtful if ever any of the several species will suffer extinction.

Scales being undistensible, and never falling out to be replaced, like hair and feathers, with which they have no homology, serpents get room for growth and renew their coats periodically by sloughing off the entire skin, underneath which a new external skin has formed and separated itself from the now faded and rusted cuticule. This process occurs during August to the adult, two or three changes happening in a single summer with youngsters, who outgrow their vestments very speedily. It is a popular idea that this midsummer sloughing occupies a considerable period, during which the serpents are harmless, because blind. It is quite supposable that this might be so, since the outer layer of the cornea of the eye peels off with the slough, and during the few preceding days the eye has a dull filmy appearance. But captive snakes given active mice at this time attack them without hesitation or missing. After the molt the eye gleams bright and cold like a jewel, but with a sullen, ferocious and relentless expression, for it is overhung by the bony penthouse of the broad, strong superoritable bones that give a fulcrum to the powerful muscles of the jaws. The cruel eye and its fixed stare introduces the once vexing question of fascination; but before discussing it some account of the food and feeding habits of our subject will be well.

The disposition of the whole family is sluggish and is opposed to any active movement and even in taking its prey beyond the one lightning swift blow that smites it down—so startling a contrast to the ordinary lethargy! The moccasin, to be sure is somewhat an exception, since he is a good swimmer and chases in their element frogs, watersnakes, tadpoles and the less agile fishes, like the catfish.

The most rapid exertions of rattlesnakes are aroused in fleeing from danger; yet, when doing their best on open ground, their pace can easily be equalled by a child, without running as I have seen on the plains, so that a black snake, or Eutania, could not only overtake but circle round and round them. Their plan in food-getting, then, is not to pursue their prey, but to lie in wait for it, and strike it before their presence is expected. Protected by his colors that assimilate him to the haunts he most frequents, whether wood and rocks, as in the eastern crotail, or the barren uplands chosen by the far western species; the shaded morasses threaded by the dark-skinned massasuguas; the lush meadows where the copperhead lurks; the stream-bank or rice bridge whence the cottonmouth plunges into the water; or the yellow weeds under whose mottled shadows the little ground rattlers become invisible—hidden, and motionless for hours together in one or another of these resorts, the crotalus coils in patient vigilance. "Though aware of the passenger's presence he either lies quiet or glides away to a more retired spot." His course is that of the darkey who was urged to follow into the thicket and kill it: "Massa, I nebber bodders nothin' wot don' bodder me; I makes dat a rule." Here, again, nevertheless, an exception must be noted for the copperhead, and more especially for the moccasin—vicious reptiles, asking little provocation before inflicting their deadly wound. Holbrook says the "moccasin attacks everything that comes within its reach, erecting its head and opening its mouth for some seconds before it bites." All other snakes put in a cage with it show the keenest terror. No species of crotalus, however, will follow the object of its rage as do some of the non-venomous serpents.

Such are the facts representing the food-getting of the rattlesnakes, while those of other serpents would furnish an equally prosaic examination; yet the notion that the small, bead-like eye, and tongue darting forked flame from the black lips exerted a charm or fascination upon smaller animals, luring them within reach of the fatal stroke, is as old as the fabled basilisk—older, indeed, for to it, no doubt, the very image of the basilisk owes its origin. Travelling westward, it came to America with the earliest bookmakers, and was at once attached to our subject and to the blacksnake. "Birds have been seen to drop into its mouth," wrote Penant; "squirrels descend from the trees, and leverets run into its jaws. Terror and amazement seem to lay hold of these animals, etc., etc. "All agree," said Old Catesby, of South Carolina, who confesses he never witnessed the phenomenon of fascination for himself—"all agree in the manner of the process, which is that animals, particularly birds and squirrels, no sooner spy the snake than they skip from spray to spray, hovering and approaching gradually nearer the enemy, regardless of any other danger, but with distracted gestures and outcries, descend through from the top of the loftiest trees, to the mouth of the snake, who opens his jaws, takes them in, and instantly swallows them."—ERNEST INGERSOLL, in The Manhattan.

It should seem that indolence itself would incline a person to be honest, as it requires infinitely greater pains and contrivances to be a knave.

A VETERAN BENEFACTOR.

His Past Life, Present Plans, and What He Has to Say Upon a Subject That Astonished Him.

(New York Times)

Nearly forty years ago a young man, of unusual endowments, began to mould public opinion upon a subject of vital importance. Like all pioneers, his early efforts were unsuccessful, but his ability and the value of his work soon won public confidence and to-day there is not a village or hamlet in the country that has not been influenced by Dr. Dio Lewis. When, therefore, it was learned yesterday that he contemplated the establishment of a large magazine in this city, the fact was deemed so important that a representative of this paper was commissioned to see him and ascertain the truth of the rumor.

Dr. Dio Lewis is a gentleman of sixty years, and two hundred pounds, with snow white hair and beard, but probably the most perfect picture of health and vigor in the metropolis. He is a living exponent of his teachings, and notwithstanding the amount of work he has already done, promises still greater activity for years to come. He received the interviewer most courteously, and in reply to a question said:

"It is true I have come to New York to estable a monthly magazine. I have come here for the same reason that I went to Boston 25 years ago. Then Boston was the best platform in the country from which to speak of education. New York has now become most hospitable to progressive thoughts, and especially so to movements on behalf of physical training.

"I have reason to know the great and abiding interest of the American people in this subject. They have come to realize that the future of our country pivots upon our physical vitality, and especially upon the vigor of our women. My new magazine will bear the title 'Dio Lewis's Monthly,' and be devoted to Sanitary and Social Science. I hope through its pages to inaugurate a new departure in hygiene."

"Have you not written several books on the subject?"

"Yes, nine volumes, and some of them like 'Our Girls,' published by the Harpers, have had an enormous circulation, but the best work of my life I shall give the world in the new magazine. Forty years of skirmishing ought to conclude with ten years of organized warfare."

"Doctor, what is the occasion of this new interest in health questions?"

"It has come through suffering, which seems the only road to self knowledge. The stomach, heart, kidneys, or liver fall into trouble, happiness is gone, and then people give attention to their health."

"Which of these organs is most frequently the victim of our errors?" asked the reporter.

"Within the last few years diseases of the kidneys have greatly multiplied. When I was engaged in practice, thirty-five and forty years ago, serious disease of the kidneys was rare; but now distressingly frequent and fatal."

"To what do you attribute this great increase of kidney troubles?"

"To the use of stimulating drinks, adulterated food and irregular habits of life."

"Doctor, have you any confidence in the remedy of which we hear so much now-a-days, 'Warner's Safe Cure?'"

"I believe in the ounce of prevention, rather than in a ton of cure."

"But have you noticed the remarkable testimonials of Warner's remedy?"

"I have, and confess that they have puzzled and astonished me. The commendations of proprietary medicines usually come from unknown persons residing in back countries. But I see in our most reputable newspapers the warmest praise of Warner's Safe Cure from College Professors, respectable physicians, and other persons of high intelligence and character. To thrust such testimony aside may be professional, but it is unmanly. No physician can forget that valuable additions to our Materia Medica have sprung from just such sources. I was so impressed with this cloud of witnesses that I purchased some bottles of Warner's Safe Cure at a neighboring drug store, and analyzed one of them to see if it contained anything poisonous. Then I took three of the prescribed doses at once, and found there was nothing injurious in it. I do not hesitate to say that if I found my kidneys in serious trouble, I should use this remedy, because of the hopelessness of all ordinary treatment, and because when a hundred intelligent and reputable persons unite in the statement that a certain remedy has cured them of a grave malady, I choose to believe that they speak the truth."

"But as you may know, my great interest in life lies in prevention. For forty years I have labored in this field. One of the phases of my work in New England was the establishment of the Ladies' Seminary at Lexington, Mass. My aim was to illustrate the possibilities in the physical training of girls during their school life. This institution became before I left it, the largest and most successful Seminary for young women owned and managed by one person, in our country. I sat down to dinner every day with a family of two hundred persons. The remarkable results of this muscle training among girls, were given in my paper published in the North American Review of December, 1882.

"Besides, I established the Normal Institute for Physical Training in Boston, and for ten years was its President and Manager. Dr. Walter Channing, Dr. Thomas Hoskins, Professor Leonard, and others were among its teachers, and more than four hundred persons took its diploma and went out into all parts of the land to teach the new school of gymnastics. And now the years left to me I propose to devote to the magazine which I have come here to establish. It will be the largest periodical ever devoted to this field of literature, and will present the hundred and one questions of hygiene with the simplicity of a child's talk. To this end all so-called learning will be subordinated. The magazine will be more or less illustrated, and will strive to reach a high place in the confidence and hearts of the people. In a few weeks, our first number will appear, and we shall fondly hope for it a hearty welcome."

The facts above narrated are indeed most important. It is gratifying to know that the lifelong experience of a gentleman who stands without a peer in successfully demonstrating the principles of hygiene; whose heart has always been in sympathy with the afflicted, and whose brain has ever been active in planning for their relief, are to be given to the public through the pages of a magazine. And it is specially significant as proof positive of rare merit that a proprietary medicine, even with such high standard as Warner's Safe Cure is known to have should be endorsed and recommended by a man so able, so reputable and of such national renown as Dr. Dio Lewis.

THE BOLT AND IRON C

LATE DOMINION BOLT CO.

We predict a high premium for the stock of The Bolt and Iron Co. They are moving into their new works, which cover about [illegible] acre of ground, all the men and machinery on the ground floor, so arranged that the best results will be had at the smallest cost. They pay a ten per cent. dividend this year, they will do better next; they carry a large amount over, after payment of dividend to the credit of profit and loss and will continue to accumulate a large surplus each year from the sales of their lands besides their profits in manufacturing; the business is profitable now and constantly increasing. They withdrew the stock from the market at the beginning of the year. They are now about to offer the unallotted stock to provide for improvements. This affords an opportunity to investors that they cannot often have, an opportunity to become interested in a proved valuable and established business, manufacturing goods that are as staple as the iron from which they are manufactured. The time will come when the stock may be considered cheap at $200, now a limited amount of unallotted stock may be had at par to those who are first to see it. No fires can destroy their premises, they are fireproof, their locality is increasing in value and other projected factories seek location on the surplus land belonging to the Company which will help to make its value.

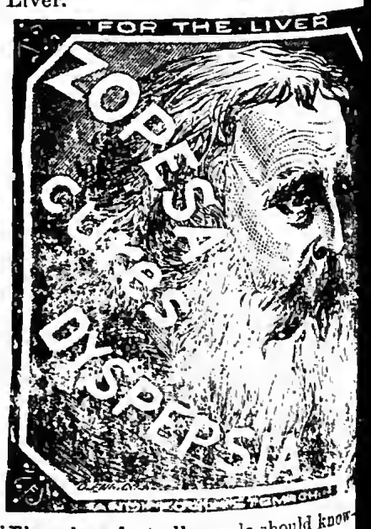
THE WORD "ELECTRICITY."



How the Jealous Makers of an "Electric" Oil Endeavored to Suppress Briggs' Electric Oil.

The Latter Triumphant in the Courts.

Electricity is recognized as a powerful agent in modern medicine, and the great success which has attended the use of Briggs' Electric Oil has naturally created for it jealous enemies among the makers of medicine alleged to be cures for diseases of a similar nature to those which have been so successfully combatted by Briggs' Electric Oil. The most prominent and active among these enemies have been Messrs. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, manufacturers of a medicine called "Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil." These jealous persons sought to prevent from using the word "electric" on our labels, claiming that it was an infringement upon their trade mark, being similar to the word "electric." It will be observed that the word "electric" means something, and is used in connection with our oil because the oil is charged with electricity by a powerful battery, as set forth in the sworn evidence of the maker before the court. Both Messrs. Northrop & Lyman, on oath, deposed that no electricity whatever was put into "Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil," and that in the face of the fact that on their labels appears a cut of a bottle, from which a large number of formidable thunderbolts are radiating. The statement is also made that the oil is "combined with electricity." The expose of this fraud upon the people was the grand result of the ligitation, so far as the manufacturers of "Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil" were concerned. It amounted to an actual acknowledgment under oath, by the makers of the oil, that they had been palming off on the public a medicine said to contain electricity which did not contain anything of the sort. After being a short time before the court, the proprietors of Briggs' Electric Oil, having stated under oath that their oil was charged with electricity, and confirmed in the use of the label bearing the word "electric," and showing the device of the five cell battery with which the oil is charged in the course of its manufacture; and to-day Briggs' Electric Oil stands before the people in its claim to be what it is having been vindicated by the Canadian High Court of Chancery.

What is remote and difficult of success are apt to overate; what is really best for us lies always within our reach, though often overlooked.

A boy without hands has been arrested in Altoona for robbery. Being minus hands, he seems to have "put his foot in it." The time will not hang heavy on his hands while in jail, anyhow.

The Only Way to Get It.

We are assured of the genuineness of the following curious notice, addressed quite recently, to the members of a Friendly Society, which need not fear a "run" upon it, if the procedure therein described be rigidly adhered to: "In the event of your death, you are requested to bring your book, policy, and certificate at once to the agent, Mr.—, when your claims will have immediate attention."—Chambers' Journal.

FOR THE FARMER.

Farm Notes for July.

SUMMER FALLOWS,

once so common, are now considered of questionable value as a means of bringing up the fertility of an over-cropped soil. It is cheaper either to apply some commercial fertilizer, or grow a scavenger crop, like buckwheat, and plough it under as green manure. There is considerable less of soluble plant food in a bare fallow, that growing plants will take up and hold. The mechanical improvement of a heavy soil by fallowing is not to be overlooked, and the killing of the weeds in foul land by the frequent stirring of the soil, is another important advantage gained by a summer fallow. Nearly all these good results are, however, obtained by a quick-growing crop, that is turned under before weeds have time to form seeds.

EARLY POTATOES

should be harvested as soon as ripe, lest wet weather cause them to sprout and rot. A second crop may be grown by planting the early and quick-growing kinds by the first of the month. The late crop should be kept free from weeds and the destructive potato beetle.

ROOTS.

Ruta-bagas or Swedish turnips may be sown until the middle of the month. The ground cleared of early potatoes is especially fitted for a crop of turnips. The soil must be rich, deep, and mellow, and the seed, three pounds to the acre, sown in drills thirty inches apart.

WHEAT.

To be of the best quality wheat should be cut when the grain, crushed between the finger nails, breaks into four and shows no signs of dough. If there is a heavy harvest, it is better to begin the work a little before this, than to have any cut after it is "dead ripe." Improper shocking of the sheaves is a great source of loss. Each bundle should be set firmly upon the ground. The best way to do this is to take one in each hand, bringing the two down with their heads close together. After three pairs have thus been placed in a row, two more are set on each side, making an oval shock. The heads of all the bundles are brought close together, and the cap-sheaf adjusted. A larger shock may be made of four pairs of bundles, with three sheaves on each side. The cap will consist of two sheaves, and the whole shock of eighteen bundles.

OATS

may be cut while the straw is somewhat green. If fully ripe, cut in early morning and rake and bind late the following afternoon, to avoid shelling. Shock carefully, as the straw must be well cured before being housed. When wheat follows the oat crop, the stubble may be stirred with a cultivator, to give the scattered grain a chance to sprout before ploughing.

FODDER CROPS.

Fodder corn may be sown from week to week through July to furnish an excellent supplement to the pastures, that are frequently short and dry in late summer. Golden millet is a productive fodder crop, and on rich soil is ready for cutting in a few weeks from the time of sowing. If there is any left from green feeding, it may be cured into excellent hay. Hungarian grass may be sown early this month, but the soil must first be made rich and mellow.

Live Stock.—Hints and Helps.

HORSES

need to be kept clean and frequently curried. Washing the legs is advisable, especially if the animals are worked in mud and dust. Clean the stables daily, to prevent the accumulation of troublesome flies. A weak solution of carbolic acid or a decoction of smart weed will aid in keeping off the flies, while the team is in the field. Fly nets of light cloth are inexpensive, easily made, and should be worn by all work horses when in the harness. Grass alone is insufficient feed; to it add a good supply of oats and corn, ground together and mixed wet with cut hay. It is sometimes best to feed the horses in the field. Feeding oats on the ground is wasteful and unpleasant.

COWS.

If the flow of milk is once reduced, it is difficult to bring it up again, therefore use all the extra feed necessary to prevent the decrease. Green fodder alone is not enough to piece out the short pasture and some ground feed should accompany it. A cool, dark stable is preferable for cows to a hot pasture in midday. Dry earth makes a better summer litter than straw.

SHEEP

intended for the butcher need abundant feeding. Oil cake with the ground feed is excellent. Store sheep will thrive in a good pasture, well watered and shaded. The importance of a cool shelter from the hot noonday sun cannot be over-estimated. Sheep troubled with dysentery will retire from the flock, and unless looked after, may be lost. Remove the sick animal to a cool shed, and give one ounce of castor oil, followed by bran or oat meal mash. Flies are often troublesome at this season. If maggots are found, apply tar and grease, and clip the wool closely about the affected part.

PIGS.

If to meet the early demand, the young pigs may be pushed rapidly by good feeding. Sows need rich food in abundance, to produce a full flow of milk. Young pigs should have a separate feeding place. A run in clover stubble is relished by swine. Provide a bed of sand in the yard or pen. Pigs to come in November should be spoken for this month. If the stock is not what is desired, begin at once to improve it by securing the use of some pure-blood male.—American Agriculturist.

Chinatown, San Francisco.

The Chinese of California are one of the standing wonders of the State to constantly succeeding seasons of tourists. They consider them as one of the inventory of things to be done on the coast, and when they have gone through the Chinese quarters, which is a picture in miniature of the life which Eastern theorists find so full of all the virtues, they think with that experience they know everything pertaining to the problem of the Chinese in America. So Chinatown must be visited, of course; as it is one of the curiosities to be seen, which is easily done, it being in the very heart of San Francisco, but a few steps from Kearney street. In this section all the Chinese, thousands of them, are congregated. It is a city within a city, its people having manners, customs and civilization as distinct from our own as are their own cities of Pekin or Canton. It is a city of China within a city of America. In fact, you are transported 6,000 miles by walking a hundred yards. The Chinese quarter is a rectangular block, seven squares in length by two in breadth. The houses are nearly all swarming with tenants, hundreds of human beings packed in a space that would but conveniently accommodate one white family. Partitions are placed in between the ceiling and the floor, making two whole rooms where there ought to be one. A long, narrow aisle runs down the centre, with shelves one above another at the sides for beds, which remind one of the bunks in an ocean steamer. The blocks are cut into sections by narrow alleys filled with squalid, underground dens, and attics whose overhanging dormer windows shut out all but a patch of sky. The main streets are lined by the stores of the great Chinese merchants, in front of which Chinese workmen and porters are busy packing and shipping goods that have been manufactured upon the premises by Chinese labor. There are large stores which have been converted into workshops, where dozens of Chinamen can be seen turning out boots and shoes in all stages of completion. It is interesting to visit the jewellery establishments, where dozens of Chinese goldsmiths are at work making Chinese jewellery and various little ornaments from the virgin gold. They are very handy fellows, and their patience is worthy of cultivation by those who consider themselves superior. On inquiring the price of any little ornament, they first weigh the article and then add to the worth of the gold the cost of labor performed in the manufacture. To visitors, I say, don't fail to purchase a ring as a souvenir of the place. One of unique workmanship can be bought for "five dolla." In passing on our attention is arrested by the clerk, cashier, accountant, or whatever he may be, seated at the desk writing in those strange Chinese characters, which we poor heathen with deft fingers he dips a small pointed brush into the moistened surface of a cake of ink, and with many a dash and artistic stroke, everyone of whose curves is a line of beauty, makes out his accounts or memorandum, as it may be. Trades of every character and description are pursued, from hucksters stands and hawking, all through the category of business avocations, to the extensive markets where nearly everything is sold. The meat market is, perhaps, the most interesting feature of the heterogeneous commerce. Here is gathered together a conglomerated array of delicious viands which comprise the toothsome morsels of the Mongolian's diet—an extensive supply from which the heathen Chinee or the Christian American may select a choice tidbit to please his palate. Here we find rice, mice and frogs, sharks' fins, fish with teeth, fowls' brains, sea gulls' eggs, clams strung along a curious cord, small sausages on the ends of strings, ducks' legs dried, small sides of pork glazed and ornamented, ducks, fowls and fish scientifically dissected, besides jellied looking masses of queer meats, the ingredients of which no fellow can tell unless he's a Chinese. The prevailing meat is pork—no beef, no mutton. Here I have seen many different kinds of vegetables that I never saw elsewhere. The Chinese are extensive and clever gardeners and import seeds from China, as they do very many other things that may be seen here.

TALL, DECAYED BUILDINGS,

There are fine art stores, and stores where rare and curious China ware may be bought, beautiful fans which conceal knives five or six inches long, curious baskets filled with paper flowers, and ornamental silk pendants hanging from beneath. Goods can be bought in these stores anywhere from twenty-five cents to $500. Odd little stands, presided over by Chinamen, are to furnish refreshments in the shape of sugar cane, fruits, nuts and oranges, real Chinese oranges, small, but oh, so delicious. All kinds of candied fruit, toted out in small dishes and kept under a glass case. One old Chinaman was selling candy from a box in the shape of a Chinese junk.

In traversing the streets you will often come across a Chinese shoemaker seated on the sidewalk, with his tools beside him, mending Chinese shoes, while the owners squat down beside him and wait till they are done. Most of the cellars along the thoroughfares are occupied by barber shops, and the Chinese mode of wearing the hair must make business good for them. As a stranger stands and watches one these doughty knights of the razor, he is led to believe that the Chinese barber has not his counterpart the world over. The skull under his manipulation soon becomes as smooth as ivory. This done he passes on to the pig-tail, which he brushes, perfumes and dresses with very great care. Other cellars are used for factories, and others for opium dens. These latter are mostly situated down alleys, where it's not any too safe to go without a guide and protector, for there are often long dark passages to be traversed before entering the places, where you can find Chinese stretched out on bunks, each with a little lamp and long pipe, the bowl of which is not much larger than the cup of an acorn and near the same shape. You will see those who have just commenced the operation, those who are a little further on towards forgetfulness, and those who are entirely oblivious to all surroundings. The modus-operandi of the opium smoker is as follows: He takes a little ball of the drug on a wire and cooks it in the lamp, to keep the melted globules from falling. When of the proper consistency and shape, he plugs the small bowl of the pipe with it, then holding the pipe to the lamp he puffs rapidly. Dense clouds of smoke arise and the victim to the habit continues the operation until he is overcome by the narcotic, when he rolls over and loses himself till the following day. A very intelligent Chinese merchant, who speaks excellent English, in a conversation with a gentleman on the evils of opium smoking, said: "It is the curse of our people; it takes away strength, it never gives any. It weakens a man, thins his blood, and steals all his energy. It makes him cold, makes him what you call invalid, no good for any real work." Invalid, he is indeed, for of all the thousands of Chinamen I have seen, I do not remember having seen but a very few healthy looking ones, all pale, sickly, flabby, uncanny looking objects, which one gazes upon with a feeling akin to disgust.

TURNING AND TWISTING THE WIRE,

The fame of the Rev. The present Earl Grey would have filled a higher position had he not been called too early to the Lords, and the Marquis of Salisbury would have been more useful to his party and more powerful had he remained Lord Robert Cecil. The Duke of Argyle, too, would have been a greater force in the lower House.

A Miser's Avarice.

The following anecdote about a miser illustrates the masterfulness of avarice when once it has seated itself in a man's soul:

He was a blind millionaire, and about to be operated upon for cataract by a skillful oculist, who was to receive 50 louis d'or as his fee. The operation on the right eye had been most successful. "I can see!" exclaimed the millionaire, overjoyed; "I can distinguish the colors. I recognise my precious cash box."

"Very well, then," replied the practitioner, "let us lose no time, but commence on the left eye."

"No, no," said the miser; "all things considered, I'll pay you at once 25 louis. I had as lief remain blind in one eye and save the other 25."

MARKDALE, JULY 5TH, 1883.

TRAVERSTON WOOLLEN MILL.

This manufacturing industry is situated on the Saugeen river, a few rods below Traverston grist mill, about 6 miles west of Markdale. We visited this secluded and picturesque place on Saturday last, and were both astonished and surprised at the extent to which this business is carried on by the present proprietors, C. F. Cliff & Son. There is Carding, Spinning, Weaving, Dyeing, Knitting, fulling, &c., going on all at once, giving the factory an appearance of activity not often seen in rural districts. The quality of the work turned out is certainly creditable to the proprietors, there is the spinning machine running 180 threads at once, 4 knitting machines turning out 30 pairs of woollen socks each of superior quality daily, then there is sashes, mufflers, ladies clouds, knit jackets for male or female being manufactured in thousands, the most of which are shipped to dealers in Montreal, there is now 23 hands engaged, while woollen goods are being turned out at the rate of $1,000 worth per month, a visit to this factory will repay those in need of woollen goods, or having custom carding &c. to do. you will find either Mr. Cliff, sr., or Son or in fact any of those connected with the firm, courteous and obliging, and we have no fears but your visit will be satisfactory.

PRESENTATION.

The Incumbent having arranged to be absent from the Parish for three months on a visit to England, a large number of the members of Christ Church congregation assembled at the residence of Mr. G. Walker to take formal leave of their Pastor. During the evening, the company being called together, Mr. Turner read the following

ADDRESS:

DEAR PASTOR—

A large number of the members of Christ Church congregation having a desire to express their gratitude towards you, take this opportunity of doing so. During the five years you have been with us in the service of the Great Master, we acknowledge the innumerable spiritual and temporal benefits we have experienced through your personal efforts. You have shown that zeal, and exercised that devotion to the cause of Christ and His Church which worldly offerings cannot recompense. As a slight token of our love for you and our appreciation of your many kindly and beneficial acts we humbly ask you to accept this purse. As you are about to be separated from us for a time, we shall earnestly pray for your safety and welfare, and for your speedy return, that you may continu the good work which you have so successfully carried on in the past.

REPLY.

The Rev. J. Ward briefly replied in effect as follows:

MY DEAR PEOPLE—

It pleases me much to meet with you this evening and to receive so substantial a token of your appreciation of my humble efforts to direct you into that path which alone leads to happiness here and hereafter. I say I am pleased to receive this token at your hands, and value more than I can express the kind words with which it is accompanied, because it is unmistakable evidence that my efforts in this place have not been in vain, and I trust it may be God's good pleasure to hear and grant your prayers, that after a little while I may be restored to you with renewed energy of body and mind, to continue the good work of building up His church in this place, which work is very dear to my heart, and it gratifies me much to find God's ancient church increasingly dear to you all.

Upon an occasion of this kind, words to me seem to be devoid of meaning, yet allow me, since I do nothing better, to say to you, each one and all—I thank you.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

(From the Advertiser.)

The County Council of the County of Grey met in the Court House, Owen Sound, Monday evening last. All members were present Warden in the chair, Roll called, when the Warden read his address to the Council. as follows:

GENTLEMEN of the Council, I am happy to meet you in the Council for the despatch of public business. As agriculturists you will deplore with me the effects of the past winter (with its more than usual severity) on our winter wheat, yet it is a reason of thankfulness that the recent rains have so refreshed the crops, as to give fair prospects that there will be plenty in our land.

It will be satisfactory to that portion of our country more immediately interested in the Toronto Grey & Bruce Railway, to know that our Treasurer after considerable correspondence with several Loan Companies has invested $15,000 of funds belonging to By-Law 174 in London and Canadian company's Debentures bearing interest at five per cent payable half-yearly.

Your County valuators appointed at January Session, after making declaration of office, and receiving a certified copy of By-Law 313 defining their duties commenced work as directed, and have made considerable progress. A statement of which will be submitted to you.

The most important matter that will require your consideration at this session will I think, be the equalization of the County Assessment, which I hope, with the able assistance of your Finance Committee you will be able to arrive at in a just and satisfactory manner.

I am happy to inform you that our County is financially in a good position, so much so that the estimates for 1884 will show a reduction under nearly every head of expenditure.

In conclusion, gentlemen, allow me to express the hope that the harmony and good feeling which has always characterized the meetings of this council will be continued; and that I may with confidence rely on your kindly forbearance and co-operation in the discharge of my duties.

I am, gentlemen,
Your obedient servant.
DAVID MCNICOL.

A BIG BONANZA.

A SILVER MINE IN ONTARIO UNDOUBTEDLY THE RICHEST ON THE CONTINENT.

The Prince Arthur's Landing, Ont., Herald, of May, 23rd, contains an account of a silver mine at Rabbit Mountain, about 24 miles from the Landing, in the Township of Paigoonge, a few facts concerning the same are as follows:—

The owners of the mine are General Wild, Captain Dan. McPhee and Olive Dovnis, the latter being the discoverer. During the winter the men have been occupied in opening up a road to the mine from Point De Meuron, and actual mining has not been commenced until lately. Mr. Dovnis informed a reporter of the Herald that Himself and Captain McPhee commenced mining on the 14th day of February last. They had sunk a shaft and commenced cross cutting on the vein. Up to the present they have gone to the width of forty-five feet, but as yet have not reached the width of the vein, which is a true fissure. Every particle of rock that has been taken out is fit for the stamp mill, The ore taken out is quartz and spar. The appearance of the silver is black—black sulphate and native—the purest silver there is.

The vein ore carries none of the baser metals; nothing but the pure silver. The vein can be traced for a considerable distance on this property, and in any part of it can be found in paying quantities. No more than two miners have been at work as yet, and in two weeks work they had taken out one hundred thousand dollars worth of silver. This statement seems almost incredulous, but it is nevertheless true. In crossing the vein they discovered a vug, in which have been found nuggets of silver weighing from one to seven pounds—black sulphates. In this vug they did not put in a blast, but could pick out the nuggets of silver with their hands and shovels, without actual mining. Out of this vug they had taken thirth-five thousand dollars worth of native silver. The full width of the vain is not known, but they have already crossed it for forty five feet. This mine is paying for itself. The owners have worked with their own hands and taken out the silver, the receipts from which they will purchase the machinery for the further working of the mine. A mine where nuggets of silver weighing seven pounds and under can be picked up, and some of the products of which will go at least $12,000 to the ton, must be pronounced to be among the foremost mines of this continent. There is a likelihood of the vein improving as they go down, as it is in the proper kind of rock.

A violent thunder storm passed over this place Tuesday evening, accompanied by very high wind. The rain as it poured down was hurled about by the wind, giving it the appearance of a drifting snow storm. A barn belonging to John Hamilton was struck by lightning, but not much damaged, however. A match was played between Williamsford and Berkeley ball clubs, resulting in a victory for the former, but for want of space we cannot give the score.

The "Grip-Sack" for 1883.—Grip's summer book of "lafter" is on its way to the bookstores. The advance pages shed their light upon our sanctum this week, and we have felt the weary weight of years lifted from our shoulders since reading them over. The pen of "Swiz," and the pencils of J. W. Bengough, Wm. Bengough, and J. Kelly, have combined to make a literary and artistic repast fitted to charm away the mosquitoes in the hot season. Ice cream is well enough in its way, but for pleasure combined with instruction give us the Grip-Sack. It will be out early in July. Price as usual, 25 cents.

Mr. Thos. Kells returned last Friday from a trip to Manitoba. He went by Owen Sound and the lakes, and returned via Chicago, visiting Winnipeg, Regina, Moosejaw, Woolseley, Buffalo Lake and other places, and is very favorably immpressed with the country, believing it to be a good agricultural country, but at present over stocked with mechanics and laborers causing a depression in that respect. Mr. Kells believes that a young man with a moderate amount of capital together with a good share of energy and business tact would in all probability make his mark in Manitoba, but those who are comfortable and perhaps well up in years had better let well enough alone.

Moses Oats says it will rain 17 days in July, correct so far.

Mr. Wm. McLeod, Shoemaker, has removed to Hopeville, where he will carry on the shoemaking business.

R. J. Sproule, Flesherton, is now running off his large and well assorted stock of spring and summer goods at reduced rates. New advertisement next week.

If you want real good bargains in first class sewing machines, now is your time to purchase them from C. Treadgold who has a good variety on hand for sale. He also can supply sewing machine needles, shuttles, oil and other requisites required in the sewing machine business.

There are a number of Orange Lodges coming to Markdale on the 12th July and a large turn out of people are also expected. When you are in town be sure you call and examine Mason's Carriages, he has some fine buggies, democrats and wagons finished which he will sell cheap.

New Discovery.—Mr. Wm. Mason, of Markdale, has discovered that he has not sufficient room to paint and finish a number of carriages now nearing completion, and begs to announce to the public that he has a few excellent and well finished Wagons, Democrats and Buggies, which he will sell at a bargain in order to make room, it won't cost you anything to call and examine and we are satisfied it will well repay you.

New Patent.—Our townsman Mr. J. G. Irving, Pumpmaker, has invented, and patented a valve for pumps to prevent sand, gravel, chips or anything from being drawn up with the water that would injure the valves or hinder their proper working. The invention has been tested and found to be perfect, and no doubt will be a most valuable appliance in pump-making. Mr. Irving has secured the patent for Canada and has applied for one for the United States. He will attend the Toronto Industrial and other Exhibitions in order to introduce and advertise it. We have no doubt there is a fortune in it for the inventor and patentee.

Excitement Caused by a Strangely Marked Egg. Is the end of the world come? Moscow, Addington County, Ont., June the 26.—While the little daughter of Wm. Carr, who lives about three miles from here, was gathering eggs at the barn she found one that had the following in raised figures and letters on the shell, which were very plain and distinct:—

Under the word year was a scroll or dash, and under that was a mised cross, on which could be seen the form of a man hanging; and on the opposite side of the egg was a spot that looked like a sun or moon. Considerable excitement is caused by it many people believing it to be a warning of the consummation of the world. This is no hoax, as your correspondent has examined the egg carefully.

DOMINION DAY IN FLESHERTON.

The celebration of confederation in Flesherton was a success in every respect, owing to the heavy rain about 11 o'clock the trades procession had to be abandoned which caused some little disappointment. Fully one thousand people from surrounding sections were in town giving the place a stirring appearance, there was some disputing on the race ground, and with this exception good order and quietness prevailed throughout the day.

The prizes in the horse races are as follows:

Open Trot—1st, Hannah & Trimble's "Chesnut Jim," 2nd, McGirr's "Frenchman." Open Run—1st, Hannah & Trimble's "Ella Walker," 2nd, Gladstone's "Trouble," 3rd, G. S. Brown's Owen Sound "Sandy." Local Trot—1st, Hanna & Trimble's "Peacemaker," 2nd, Highland's Owen Sound "Highland Maid." Local Run—1st, G. S. Brown's "Sandy," 2nd, Brown's "Rean Pony."

Foot Races—Men's mile race, Elliott. Boys race, McAlear.

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church provided an excellent dinner and did a good business through the day, and gave a concert at night which was largely attended and immensely enjoyed, it was indeed a grand affair and a rich treat which deserves a more extended report, but our columns are so crowded this week we are compelled to be brief. The proceeds were very satisfactory also.

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

CHAPTER I.

A FORBIDDEN PLEASURE.

"Can you see, Stella?"

"Yes; lean a little more this way. Oh! Cecily, do look at that lovely Madame de Pompadour dress; and there goes a Joan of Arc with a real helmet and cuirasse! And see, there is Mosquetaire walking about with a Mephistopheles!"

"That was Monsieur d'Arpigny. I heard him announced."

"And there goes the old Prefect in a white wig and knee-breeches and yellow rosettes on his shoes. Doesn't he look ridiculous?"

"And his wife in a hoop and big ruff! Her nose looks redder than ever! Oh! Stella, doesn't it seem hard we should be up here whilst all the fun is going on?"

Stella sighs. The two blonde heads are close together, hanging over the wide oaken staircase: the two slim English girls, in their heavy crape dresses, are leaning as far forward over the bannisters as they can venture. The guests are coming up-stairs.

Madame Halevy, who lives on the floor below, is giving a fancy-dress ball, and the motly company is arriving.

It is a fine old house in a cathedral town in Western France. It had probably been a duke's palace once, and belonged to some great family in the olden time, for the rooms are large and lofty, and wainscoted, and the staircases have great carved oaken balustrades, and the ceilings are rich with paintings. But now it is all let out in different flats, and Monsieur Halevy, the sous prefet and his fat little wife had the first floor; whilst Mrs. King, the English widow, and her two fatherless girls inhabit the floor above her.

Nobody at Valency knew much about Mrs. King. She had come there a year ago, and had settled down in the place. The Prefect and the sous prefect had called upon her, so had the doctor and the principal notary of the town.

Mrs. King had returned their visits, but had declined the hospitable invitations to their houses which they pressed upon her. She was a widow, she said, and her mourning was too deep for her to go into society, and her daughters were too young to go out without her, even had not their father's death been so recent.

There was a good ladies' college at Valency, where the daughters of the well-to-do inhabitants were educated. The Misses King went daily to the classes at this college; and it was generally understood that Mrs. King had come to Valency in order to give her daughters a cheaper and better education than she could have secured in her own country.

They learnt, at all events, to chatter French like French girls. They, poor children, for they were little more, would have been glad enough to have made friends amongst their school-fellows and to have gone with them amongst their families and their homes; but Mrs. King set her face against their making friends. They were to be civil and pleasant with all, but to be intimate with none. It was the maxim she acted upon herself.

By degrees the good people of Valency understood that the English lady did not desire to have the seclusion of her retirement invaded, and they let her alone. But many of them still thought it was hard upon her girls.

Only that morning Madame Halevy had panted up-stairs to her neighbor's room in order to petition that Stella and Cecily might be allowed to come down, if only for for an hour, to see her fancy-dress dance.

Mrs. King had been horrified.

"It is quite impossible, madame—I assure you it is impossible. They are too young. Why, Cecily is only sixteen."

"Ah! then, let Mademoiselle Stella come. She is nearly eighteen. May she not come?"

"But consider, Madame Halevy, their deep mourning. I could never allow my child to be present at such a gay scene so soon after her father's death. It is barely a year ago. I am afraid it is an impossibility, though I thank you all the same for your kind thought."

Madame Halevy retired discomfited, and Mrs. King, no doubt, considered that she had but done her duty. Stella and Cecily were, however, very miserable.

"Horrid, hateful crape!" cried Cecily, in a passion, when the two sisters were in their room together. "What a shame it is to keep us mewed up on account of it!"

"Oh! hush, Cecily! We ought not to forget that it is for poor papa."

"Don't be a goose, Stella," cried Cecily, who had no hesitation in speaking out her thoughts. "You know very well that poor papa didn't trouble his head much about us. Why are we to sham being so unhappy when we are not a bit, and all this while afterwards, too?"

"It is a great pity, certainly," assented Stella, thoughtfully, though whether she alluded to the crape or to the death of her parent is not quite clear. "Never mind, Cecily, I'll tell you what we'll do; when mamma has shut herself up in her room, and we are supposed to have gone to bed, we will creep out on the staircase and see all the people come. It will be great fun, we shall see the dresses at all events; only you must be sure to speak in a whisper, in case mamma should hear us."

So there they are, hanging over the bannisters. Two soft, fair heads, with fresh, English faces, and bright, Saxon blue eyes, leaning against each other, whispering in eager delight and admiration to one another.

"Look at that man coming up the stairs now," cries Cecily. "Doesn't he look like an Englishman?"

"He is an Englishman, I feel sure; he is so tall, and well-made, and upright. What a beautiful black dress he has! and how handsome he is!"

Both girls gazed eagerly down at the newcomer. He came lightly and quickly up the stairs, in the wake of an elderly man whom they recognized as the Mayor. He was, as Stella said, tall and well-made, and his fresh complexion and curly brown hair would have proclaimed him to be English in any foreign country.

"There is no young man like that in Valency," said Stella, with significant admiration, as he passed on below them into the ball-room, and the music striking up as he entered, prevented them from hearing his name

Oh! how tantalizing was that delicious waltz that was going on! and now every one had arrived, so there were no more wonderful dresses to look at, they could only see a blaze of light through the half-open door, and hear the loud hum of many voices and the tramping of many feet from the room below. Happy dancers! how those two poor, lonely girls up in the dark, on the stairs, envied them!

"Ought we not to go to bed, Stella?" whispers Cecily, at last.

"Wait a minute, here comes Madame Gambeau up the stairs. How she is chattering to that old woman with her. I wonder what it is all about?"

Madame Gambeau was the porter's wife, and a very important personage indeed in the house. She arranged and ordered everything on these occasions, for she was also Madame Halevy's cook.

She was coming up the stairs with another woman, and they were both jabbering loudly together as only women of the lower order in France have the strength of lung and the volubility of tongue to do. Her bedroom was at the top of the house, and she was probably on her way there. She had got quite close to the English girls before she saw them.

"What is the matter, Madame Gambeau?"

"Ah! Mademoiselle King, it is you! Ah, par exemple! and I did not see you. Ah! pity me, my dear young ladies. Here is this stupid Madame Marton who comes to tell me that her daughter is ill, and cannot come to-night, and there is the procession quite spoilt! Ah! whatever shall we do?" She cast up her hands in an agony of dismay.

"Procession! What procession? What was it to be, Madame Gambeau?"

"Why, eight young girls dressed as Swiss peasants; each was to carrry a tray with lemonade, and orgeat, and such things, and go into the dancing-room between the dances and hand the things to the company. They were to be two and two in different colors—red, blue, green and yellow—and now, here is Madame Marton come to say her girl is ill, and all my procession will be spoilt. Who ever heard of seven peasants coming in!"

"Well, but," said Cecily, laughing, "is there no other girl who can take her place?"

"Alas! no, mademoiselle, there are no more that are beautiful and good; we have hunted all over Valency to find eight young girls who should be beautiful and good. Monsieur will have it so, because he is going to give them each a new gown and fifty francs apiece. You see there were a great many who were good and not beautiful—oh! a very great many of those—and some were beautiful and not at all good. That would not do; but the difficulty was to find the girls that were beautiful and well behaved also. There were only these eight, in all Valency only eight! And even of these, two are not perhaps what all would consider handsome; for Laura Tressin has a thick waist and one shoulder higher than the other, and it cannot be denied that in some lights Jeannette Dumont has a squint in her eye; still, when all of them were together it might not have been noticed; but Susette Marton, she was the best looking by far, I should have sent her in the first, and her dress is lying there all ready on my bed, and here is her mother come to say she cannot come! It is enough to break one's heart."

"But indeed, Madame Gambeau," cried the other women, "my poor child cannot lift her head from her pillow, she is in terrible pain"

"She ought to be ashamed of herself, then," replied the porter's wife, angrily. "On this night of all others, she ought to have made a point of being well. Oh! what am I to do with seven peasants instead of eight?"

Stella King was debating something in her own mind. She whispered a word to her sister.

"Oh! Stella," gasped the younger girl, with awe struck admiration. "Would you ever dare?"

Stella turned to the old woman who was still bemoaning herself over the failure of her beloved "procession."

"Madame Gambeau, how should I do for your eighth peasant?"

"You, mademoiselle? Ah! but you are only joking!"

"No, not at all. I would give anything to go down stairs to see all the people. I could hand the glasses on the tray quite easily; that is not difficult to do. Do you think the dress would fit me?"

"Oh! but what would Madame, your mamma, say?"

"Mamma need never know, she thinks we have gone to bed; It must be a secret of course, Madame Gambeau. Do you think I am good and beautiful?"

"Ah! mademoiselle, you would be ravishingly beautiful!"

"I am at least as pretty as the girl who squints," said Stella, laughing; "so take me up to your room quickly and let me put the dress on."

The two girls ran lightly up to the top of the house, passing their mother's door on tip-toe. And soon Stella had divested herself of her hated crape dress and stood arrayed in the neatest and most coquettish of little costumes. A blue merino skirt, a square velvet bodice, opening over white lawn chemisette and sleeves, and a black velvet head-dress thickly covered with silver ornaments, were the component parts of her toilet.

"Now I am ready," she cried, excitedly, dancing about the little attic in which her transmogrification had taken place. "Oh! Cecily, I feel like Cinderella going to the ball in the fairy's chariot."

"Look out for the prince, then," said Cecily, who was too unselfishly fond of her sister to grudge her the stolen pleasure she herself could not share. "Oh! Stella, you do look so lovely."

"Yes, mademoiselle is most beautiful!" cried the admiring and delighted Madame Gambeau.

Stella skipped about the room wild with excitement.

"Not a creature will know me, not even Madame Halevy; she has never seen me except in that fusty old black dress; she does not know that I can ever look so pretty as this."

But she had no idea how beautiful she really was.

"Now come," said Madame Gambeau, and held out her hand, and Stella ran quickly down stairs by her side.

CHAPTER II.

SUSETTE MARTON.

Madame Halevy's salon was filled to overflowing. There were certainly about eighty people present, and they were all in fancy-dress. It was a very brilliant scene. There was a huge chandelier in the middle of the ceiling, and numerous wax-candles round the walls, which were draped and wreathed with festoons of flowers. Most of the dresses were very handsome and very well got up. All of them were at least quaint and pretty. Through an open doorway could be seen a table which was spread in an adjoining room, to which in time everybody would sit down to a solid supper; meanwhile it was the custom that light refreshment, lemonade and other cooling drinks, should be handed to the dancers. The hour was still, however, so early that this part of the entertainment had not begun. They were all dancing. Gentlemen in France do not wait for introductions to partners, they walk up to the little groups of young girls and pick and choose for themselves: sometimes where there are many strangers this is embarrassing; but when, as here, in the small society at Valency, everybody has known everybody else from their babyhood, the couples pair off almost naturally, the little flirtations and amourettes are all well-known and recognized—there is no sense of surprise about it all.

Norman Allingham leant rather forlornly against the flower-bedecked wall, and looked on at it all. He was the only Englishman present, and had arrived at Valency only the same morning; he had come with a letter of introduction in his pocket to the Mayor of the town, who was an old friend of his grandfather's and no sooner had he delivered it than that hospitable personage insisted on his removing his portmanteau from the hotel to his own house; not only that, but he had insisted upon taking him with him to Madame Halevy's dance that evening.

"But I have no fancy-dress," objected Mr. Allingham.

"Ah, that is soon settled, my dear friend, for my son, who was to have been of the party, has been obliged to go to Paris on business; his dress is here all ready; it is black velvet of the time of Henri IV.; it will suit you admirably, as you are so tall and fair. You must absolutely do me the pleasure of wearing it."

Mr. Allingham was, of course, unable to refuse. But when he had come to the dance in his black velvet dress, he did not seem to derive much pleasure from it.

The Mayor explained to him that he was free to dance with any women present whose appearance he might fancy. But, seemingly, Norman's insular prejudices were too strong to endow him with the courage of addressing an unknown young lady; besides, they all looked perfectly happy—Therese, and Pauline, and Clementine, each had her Alphonse, her Adolphe, or her Francois; they did not seem to want any other partners. All the same the gay scene amused and pleased him; it was a little insight, too, into French provincial society, and as such was quite a novelty to him.

"Pleasure to-night," he said to himself, "and business to-morrow morning. I wonder what will come of this wild-goose chase of mine, and how my worthy relatives will receive me?"

At this moment there was a great commotion at the door; a dance was just over, but the band struck up a pretty, lively march, and the procession of Swiss peasant girls came winding in two and two, bearing each a little gilt wicker-work tray in her hands. They reached the middle of the room and formed a circle, and the servants came forward and loaded the trays with glasses and with biscuits. Then Monsieur Halevy, standing in the middle of the room, said:

"Messieurs and mesdames; these are the eight prettiest and most modest maidens in Valency, who are selected to wait upon you this evening, and to whom I propose giving a present of fifty francs apiece, whilst Madame Halevy will give them each a new gown."

After the girls had smiled and courtesied their acknowledgements they turned round and spread themselves about amongst the company, handling refreshments.

It was a simple little ceremony; but it had a pretty effect and produced quite a round of applause from the guests.

Even Norman Allingham thought what an effective little scene it was, and how simple-minded people they were to be so pleased at such a little thing.

And whilst he was thinking about it, suddenly one of the Swiss peasant girls stood before him handing him her tray.

Mr. Allington looked at her with a sudden interest; she stood before him with downcast eyes, blushing deeply; her fair hair shone like gold under her little black head-dress with its silver chains; her white, rounded arms, dimpled at the wrist like a child's, held the little gilded tray toward him.

"By Jove!" said the Englishman to himself, "this is the best looking girl I have seen this side of the water. What long lashes she has! I wonder what her eyes are like?"

Then aloud in very English French, he said:

"What is your name, pretty Swiss peasant?"

"Susette Marton," replied Stella, boldly, giving the name of the sick girl whose substitute she was, and as she spoke she flashed her big blue eyes for a minute up into his face.

"You are perfectly charming, Mademoiselle Susette!" said Norman, in an awful lingo, as he helped himself to an orangeade, the nastiest compound, he said to himself, he had ever been asked to partake of; but he would have taken Queen Eleanor's bowl of poison itself from so fair a Hebe.

Stella looked up in his face again and laughed.

"Monsieur is not French," she said, with her own perfect pronunciation, and there was a roguish twinkle in her eyes.

"No, you are right there, mam'zell, I am only a stupid lout of an Englishman; but I know a pretty face when I see it, for all that."

At which "Susette Marton" seemed rather offended, for she drew back quickly with a heightened color, and handed her orangeade to somebody else.

Norman Allingham followed her admiringly with his eyes as she went round the room.

What a perfectly lovely girl she was; what a charmingly lovely figure; what a dear little foot peep-d out from below her short blue skirt; what an exquisite complexion; and then what hair and eyes! And how wonderful to find all these perfections in a little French girl of the lower classes! For that, of course, was what she was. Monsieur Halevy's eight young girls, who had been selected because they were modest and pretty, who were to have fifty francs and a new gown, were, as a matter of course, chosen from the petite bourgeoisie of the town. Her father probably was a tobacconist or a baker, if indeed he was not in a still lower grade of life; he might as likely as not be no higher than a water-carrier or a chiffonier; but then where on earth did the girl get that graceful way of walking, that refined beauty, that lady-like and fascinating manner? When Mr. Allingham came to look round at the seven other peasant girls who had composed the little pageant, he found that they were as chalk to cheese compared to this one girl.

They were rosy and somewhat blousy-faced girls with black hair and eyes; they had thick waists and substantial feet and ankles; they looked thoroughly happy and jolly, but also thoroughly common and unrefined. They were good-looking, certainly, if you will, but they were of a beauty which spoke undeniably of the class from which they came.

Norman looked back at the fair-haired girl, and from looking became irresistibly impelled to follow her to the other end of the room.

A waltz was just beginning, and the Swiss peasant girls, resting from their occupation, stood looking on at the dancers; one or two of them were busy taking away the empty glasses and carrying them out of the room to be washed and refilled ready for the end of the dance.

Susette Marton stood by herself in the doorway, looking on eagerly and somewhat longingly at the dancers. One of the other girls—Madame Gambeau's niece—who had been let into the secret of who she was, had carried away her little tray to the attendants for her.

"Would you not like to dance?" said the young Englishman, in his bad French, standing suddenly before her. He had been shy of addressing the young ladies of the upper ranks of Valency society; but he did not feel himself at all unequal to a flirtation with this lovely girl, who could not from her position in the room by any possibility be a lady.

Stella looked up at him again with those bewilderingly lovely eyes.

"Oh!" she said, with a little gasp, "how I would like it!"

"Then come and waltz with me."

Half a minute of hesitation. She was a little bit uncertain as to whether this would be considered correct in the programme laid out for the "modest and pretty" Swiss girls; and she was terribly afraid lest Madame Halevy's attentions should be drawn to her, and lest she should recognize her as Miss King, from the floor above. She looked hurriedly round; Madame Halevy was nowhere to be seen; probably she was in the next room superintending the preparations for supper.

"I don't think I can say 'no,'" she said, below her breath; and the next instant Norman Allingham's arm was round her waist, and he had whirled her away into the thick of the throng.

"This is my first night in Valency," he said to her, as they stopped breathlessly for a minute after two or three turns round in the room. "I never imagined I should enjoy myself so much in this place."

"Why not, Monsieur? We are all happy at Valency."

"Ah! but then you don't know what a dreadful thing I have come here for."

"No; what is it?"

"I have come to find a wife."

Insensibly, "Susette Marton" drew herself a very little bit further away from him.

"Surely, monsieur, that is not a dreadful thing at all—quite the contrary;" and her voice was a shade colder and more polite.

"Ah! so it may be sometimes; but when a wife who has been chosen for you—whom you have never seen—whom your grandfathers and grandmothers have settled you are to marry whether you like her or no—that is another matter, is it not? But you French people understand all about mariage de convenances, don't you?"

"Oh! yes, we understand all that," said his partner, simply. "Suppose we go on dancing."

And they danced again.

"So you are to find this wife at Valency?" she inquired, when they paused once more.

"Yes; I shall have to look for her to-morow morning. But why do you speak again of such a disagreeable subject? I am perfectly happy now, and I want to forget her, for she is sure to be hateful to me—after you," he added, rather tenderly.

"Monsieur, don't talk nonsense," said Stella, averting her head.

"It is not nonsense, you dear, charming little Susette," said this very naughty young man. "I never imagined there was such a lovely French women in all the kingdom of France. Now don't look so angry, for you know very well you must have had lots of men making love to you, and you girls all like it though you pretend you don't. No. I am not going to let you go. Come this way, out on the staircase."

He drew her out at the open door on to the deserted oaken staircase, with its broad landing. The waltz was still going on; no one was outside the room.

Summer Primer.

Why do those men Run so fast this Hot weather? Is anybody Dying? No. How Red their faces are. They will burst a Blood vessel. See, they are almost Fainting, but they will try to run. Poor Fellows! Have they just Escaped from Prison? No, my child. They have summer cottages out of town, and are Merely trying to catch a Train.

Mme. Nilsson writes from London that she has taken passage for Aug. 18 on board the Gallia. Prior to her departure she will spend the time at various watering places.

How they play the Piano in New Orleans.

"I was loafing around the street one night," said Jim Nelson, one of the old locomotive engineers running into New Orleans, "and as I had nothing to do I dropped into a concert, and heard a slick Frenchman play a piano in a way that made me feel all over in spots. As soon as he sat down on the stool, I knew by the way he handled himself that he understood the machine he was running. He tapped the keys away up one end, just as if they were guages and he wanted to see if he had water enough. Then he looked up, as if he wanted to know how much steam he was carrying, and the next moment he pulled out the throttle and sailed out on the main line as if he was half an hour late.

"You could hear her thunder over the culverts and bridges, and getting faster and faster, until the fellow rocked about in his seat like a cradle. Somehow I thought he was old 26 pulling a passenger train and getting out of the way of a 'special.' Then he low worked the keys on the middle division like lightning, and then he flew along the north end of the line until the drivers went around like a buzz-saw, and I got excited. About the time I was fixing to tell him to cut her off a little, he kicked the damper under the machine wide open, pulled the throttle away back in the tender, and—Jerusalem jumpers! how he did run! I couldn't stand it any longer, and yelled to him that she was 'pounding' on the left side, and if he wasn't careful he'd drop his ash pan.

"But he didn't hear. No one heard. Everything was flying and whizzing. Telegraph poles on the side of the track looked like a row of corn stalks, the trees appeared to be a mud bank, and all the time the exhaust of the old machine sounded like the hum of a bumble-bee. I tried to yell again, but my tongue wouldn't move. He went around curves like a bullet, slipped an eccentric, blew out his soft plug, went down grades fifty feet to the mile, and not a well-founded brake set. She went by the passing point at a mile and a half a minute, still calling for more steam. My hair stood up like a cat's tail, because I knew the fellow was up.

"Sure enough, dead ahead of us was the head light of the 'special.' In a daze I saw the crash as they struck, and I saw them shivered into atoms, people mashed and mangled and bleeding and gasping for water. I heard another crash as the Frenchman professor struck the deep keys away down on the lower end of the southern division, and then I came to my senses. There was at a dead stand still, with the door of the fire-box of the machine open, wiping the perspiration off his face and bowing at the people before him. If I live to be a thousand years old I'll never forget the ride the Frenchman gave me on a piano."—Democrat.

The Poetry of the Table.

In the first place a starched and smoothly ironed table cloth—which, if neatly folded after every meal, will look well for several days. Then flowers and ferns in flat dishes, baskets, or small vases—or else a tiny nosegay laid upon every napkin. The salt must be pure and smooth. The butter should be moulded into criss-crossed diamonds, balls, globes, with the paddles made for this purpose. A few pretty dishes will make the plainest table glow—a small bright-colored platter for pickles, horse radish, or pickles, and butter plates representing green leaves are also attractive. A few cents' worth of parsley or cress, mingled with small scraps of white paper daintily clipped, will transform a plain dish to assume the air of a French entree. A platter of hash may be ornamented with an edging of toasted or fried bread cut into points; and a dish of cutlets or chops is much more impressive with the bones stacked as soldiers stack their guns, forming a pyramid in the centre—each one adorned with a frill of cut paper. Alternate slices of lemon, mingled with sprigs of parsley and slices of hard boiled eggs, form a pretty garnish to many dishes; and nothing could be more appetizing than beef, veal, mutton or lamb made into mince meat, pressed into form in a wine glass, then covered in pork fat, with a sprig of green parsley on the top of each little cone. The basket of fruit—peaches, pears, grapes or apples, oranges, and grapes—should be tastefully arranged and trimmed with flowers. The bowl of salad should be ornamented with the scarlet and orange flowers of the nasturtium—their piquant flavor adding zest to the lettuce, with which they can be eaten.

Modern Pessimism.

It is singular that it has been the fate of this age to be the first to elaborate a philosophy of misery. It is remarkable that Byron in England, Leopardi in Italy, Chateaubriand in France, and Schopenhauer in Germany were engaged almost simultaneously in teaching doleful doctrines. The evil side of things at times strikes every mind, even the most gay, and there are moments to everyone a passing impulse to say, with one of our modern poets, that "nature is one with rapine and harm no preacher can heal. The mayfly is torn by the swallow, the sparrow speared by the shrike, and the whole little wood where I sit is a world of plunder and prey." There seems little room for any originality in the ever-renewed murs, old as man himself, that he is born to sorrow, and that life is but ranked at best. Yet only in modern days was the doleful doctrine systemized. Only in the "Canzoni" of Leopardi, with their recurring refrain about the infinite vanity of things, has this theme been made the current of a poet's whole thoughts; and by Schopenhauer and his intellectual descendant, Von Hartmann, has the whole force of the dreary, stunning argument in favor of pessimism been constantly presented. Only in these writers and the writers who have been inspired by them, do we find it unflinchingly urged that so called progress only increases the capacity for suffering without bringing any increase or hope of increase of actual enjoyment. Schopenhauer would be an interesting intellectual phenomenon if only because he, for the first time has labored with consistency and earnestness the argument that existence must, in the most favored circumstances, show a balance on the side of misery. It is a singular circumstance that while Auguste Comte was elaborating a philosophy which deified humanity, Schopenhauer, in a neighboring country, was elaborating a system which made humanity only an object of contemplation.—London Times.

The Petroleum Fields of the World.

The relative importance of the oil fields of the world are succinctly stated as follows, in the July Century, by E. V. Smalley, in his graphic and fully illustrated article "Striking Oil": "Nearly all the petroleum that goes into the world's commerce is produced in a district of country about a hundred and fifty miles long, with a varying breadth of from one to twenty miles, lying mainly in the State of Pennsylvania, but lapping over a little on its northern edge into the State of New York. This region yielded, in 1881, 27,350,813 barrels, and in 1882, 31,398,750 barrels. A little petroleum is obtained in West Virginia, a little at various isolated points in Ohio, and a little in the province of Ontario. There is also a small field in Germany, a larger one, scantily devoloped, in Southern Russia, and one still larger, perhaps, in India. The total production of all these fields, outside of the region here described, is but a small fraction in the general account however, and has scarcely an appreciable influence upon the market. Furthermore, the oil of these minor fields, whether in America or the Old World, is of inferior quality, and so long as the Pennsylvania reservoir holds out, can only supply local demand in the vicinity of the wells."

A Charming Christening.

We were all a trifle nervous over the house the little candidate made and I could see that the old cure's hand trembled as he held the holy chrism above its head; his gentle eye beamed benovolently, but he waited reverently until she ceased her wildest wriggle and her lustiest yell before annointing her.

"Of a truth, she will never be a nun," whispered one of the little congregation. "When they scream so loud, my godmother says, they will be healthy and lucky," whispered another. "Ah, now, she is quiet, the petite. Bah! my goodness, but she is pretty!"

She was. The weather had been so bad, the spring has been so late, the baby's invalid mother delayed the christening of her darling until a sunshiny day in May and baby full six weeks old. It was a pretty picture, in which the baby framed the light. The little cherub had fair, soft hair and deep blue eyes that looked boldly at one; aristocratic little ears and mouth. Her upper lip was a perfect Cupid's bow; a dancing dimple low down in her left cheek, and her nose, though good enough in prospect, doubtless, was like all babies'—a serene pug. The little one was robed like a princess. The front of her christening robe, too, was of solid lace, faint, frothy and of a delicate cream color, the soft tone that only time can give such fabrics. Over the lace there opened another robe of pale blue and soft cashmere, turned black with old point lace.

The ceremony was long and again baby objected. In vain the big fat nurse kept up her musical crooning under the cure's Latin and gently jolted her charge up and down. Baby was sleepy and hungry and wanted mamma; neither the gentle hand of her tall, beautiful godmother, that was laid soothingly upon her little shoulder, nor the entreaty in the kind eyes of the priest could pacify. The little old sexton, who acted as assistant to the cure, was shocked, and, as he made the responses, looked over his spectacles at the baby as if he would suggest "heroic" remedies. In artistic argot they would tell you the picture was "well composed." The tall figure of the ecclesiastic bending over the queenly-robed infant; its beautiful, pale, sad-faced godmother, dressed in mourning; the fat old nurse in colors, the funny little sexton, and the extemporized congregation, open-mouthed at the splendor of "millinery" not often displayed in a little Canadian village. The ceremony had been called strictly private, and so it was, in the sense of "no cards." The sexton had come hastily in from the garden of the presbytery, where he had been digging, put on his funny spectacles and a funny pair of white cotton gloves fully an inch too long in the fingers, and hastily presented himself to the cure's call. He made no other concession to the occasion than the wriggling white gloves, not even a white collar to apologize for his gray flannel shirt. He was all funny—his figure, his dress, his spectacles, his gloves; but all put together was not as funny as his Latin.

"Dominus vobiscum," said the cure, gently.

"Et cum spiritty, to-noo-noo," responded the sexton.

"But he is intelligent and sympathetique," explained the cure to me after the ceremony was over and we stood chatting on the porch of his house. "He can keep accounts and fish, shoot, make an omelet, weave a hammock, and is an excellent gardener."

While he sounded these praises the sexton was ringing the bell as the christening procession filed up the picturesque road on the Ottawa River. The mistaken mother had sent the sexton a fee of a dollar, and as I verily believe he rang the bell for two hours, a dollar must be in this little place an extraordinary fee.

I had nearly forgot, and, like a woman, gone over into a P. S. It was a pin after all. The nurse confessed it with confusion to her mistress. Her mistress told the cure, and as we were playing whist last night, the cure told me.—St. Anne's De Bellevue, Quebec, Correspondence Philadelphia Times.

The Education of Woman.

The woman who is to be happy and useful as the maker and mistress of a home must know the art of home making and home ruling. Yet how very small a place is given to the teaching of these arts in our schemes of education for girls! We should call that men a fool who hoped to see his son successful as a merchant or banker but neglected to have him instructed in the principles of arithmetic and book-keeping. But thousands of girls are married every year who do not know how to make a loaf of bread, or to set a table, or iron a napkin, or to make a bed becomingly. Is it expected that servants shall do these things? So the young man who is to be made into a merchant or banker will have his book-keepers to write out his accounts and make his arithmetical calculations for him, but he must understand these processes for himself, or he will be at the mercy of his servants. Moreover, in the woman's case, there may not always be servants or the means with which to command their services, and their incompetence at the best needs the supervision of a mistress skilled in all their arts. This seems a homely matter, doubtless, to those persons who see the complete salvation of women in university education, but it is a matter which touches the happiness of women themselves, and closely concerns the well-being of a world whose whole life centres in and is founded upon the home. It is not too much to say that no girl ought ever to come to maturity without having acquired both skill and taste in every art of the household, or that no woman deficient in this particular can marry without serious risk to her own happiness and to that of persons around her. It does nobody any harm for the mistress of a household to know how to calculate an eclipse, but it is disastrous for her herself to be eclipsed by her Bridget.—GEO. CAREY in Harper's Magazine for July.

Don't Wish to Embarrass.

"Do you still put the finest-looking strawberries on top of the basket?"

"Toppers? Oh, yes. That is a custom of too long standing to discontinue now. It might embarrass our customers."

About Royal Viceroys.

The English papers which arrived by the late mails have all leading articles on the alleged request of the Queen's youngest son to be made Governor-General of Canada. The subject is dealt with from various points of view, but they all agree in commending the good sense displayed by Mr. Gladstone in refusing to make the appointment, and in afterwards refusing to give any explanations about the matter in the House of Commons. We heartily agree with the English papers on both points. There was nothing discreditable in the Duke or Albany making the request, but it put Mr. Gladstone in a delicate position, and few Premiers would have come out of it so well. So much for the English view of the matter; now for the Canadian one. It is said—with how much truth we cannot tell—that the Duke of Albany in requesting the Governor-Generalship, was acting on a suggestion made to him by Sir Alexander Galt. If Sir Alexander, or any other Canadian official, ever gave his Royal Highness to understand that the Canadian people would be delighted to have him as their Governor, he acted without warrant and perpetrated a piece of refined cruelty. It is safe to say that the appointment of the Duke of Albany would have been to Canadians of all, except the tuft-hunting classes, a most unwelcome one. They have for her Majesty a great deal of loyalty and respect, which are not likely to abate while she continues to occupy the throne; but they do not feel bound to transfer these feelings to her Majesty's children, except in so far as the latter show themselves worthy of them. This the Duke of Albany has not done, at least in so far as the loyalty is concerned. Perhaps he is not to blame for this, for his opportunities of winning distinction have been few. But even if he were an experienced statesman his royal birth would be an insufferable drawback to a successful vice-regal career in so Democratic a country as this, unless he could forget his court associations and throw himself heartily into the new life.

The Chinese Emperor's Troubles.

The Emperor of China, now that all the resources of his empire will be drawn on for the war with France, finds himself in serious difficulty. Young as he is, he has already to maintain some seventy women on his establishment, in various capacities, and like every other gentleman who has ladies under his protection, the duty devolves on him of clothing them. This would be comparatively easy task were the fair ones of a reasonable turn of mind. But, unhappily for the Brother of the Sun and Moon, their extravagance is pronounced to be beyond all bounds. Two hundred and fifty thousand thaels, which is more than one-half the land tax of the empire, was expended last year in silk, satin, gauze, velvet, red and gilt papers, and pearls. It is said that one dress, which is in possession of an Empress, was covered with seed pearls worked in so peculiar a fashion as to have cost a fabulous sum. With respect to this robe there are great scorchings of heart. The Empress is aged, though the dress is new. If she die, according to the custom it must be burned, supposing it be in her possession at the time of her death. She refuses to part with it, and the idea of this wastefulness, coupled with the neccessary great expenditure in the coming year, troubles the owner of the vermillion pencil exceedingly.

Our boys of the lacrosse team are winning golden opinions over on the old sod. With their Indian team they must form rather a travelling circus. They have played the all-England team and won easily. The game is not yet naturalized in Britain, and the probabilities are against it. The English lads are too heavy in flesh and run too slowly for excellence in lacrosse. From Scotland to England, and even into Wales, our lads have gone, and before they return will have travelled over almost every county of the "tight little island." Dr. Beers is proving an excellent captain, and the whole team are acting as unpaid immigration agents, as well, or even better, than those teams which shortly start for Wimbledon and Shoebury ness.

Quite a large proportion of our young men have been in camp at various points training for soldiers. Many of their friends would put it—playing at soldier. After all, however, the twelve days drill may be of value in setting lads up and giving them some idea of military discipline. That it would be of any practical value in training them for the real duties of a company few practical men will allow. But none who have gone through the experience of an annual camp can doubt that, upon the whole, in creating an esprit de corps, in giving a knowledge, superficial though it be, of military affairs, and in promoting acquaintance good is done. There is evil also, but it is minimised as much as possible. It is well, and we are glad to see it, that canteens are not of the doubtful character they have many times heretofore been. Commanding officers can do a great deal this way, and our volunteer force can boast a large number of fine fellows as officers.

The question of railway monopoly is coming up in a practical fashion in this Canada of ours. In Toronto there's the Esplanade difficulty arising out of the same evil. Reports without number have been made, but a solution of the problem seems as near as ever. In the meantime the danger to life and limb goes on increasing with the growth of the city and the increase of population. At the Queen street and King street crossings at Parkdale and at the foot of all the through streets, especially Yonge, the danger is the most imminent. But in the grasps of a railway corporation the city would seem to be powerless. Gradually the independent lines in the Province are falling in and soon but two companies will contend for the mastery or pool receipts. Indeed it is shrewdly suspected that they have agreed to do that now. It is to be hoped, however, that the Gravenhurst and Collender line may be kept free from monopoly entanglements to serve as a connecting link with the Canada Pacific for all our local lines.

One Of The Elect.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The Plain Dealer reports that the Hon. Martin A. Foran congressman elect from the Cleveland, Ohio, district, has used St. Jacobs Oil in his family and always found it safe and reliable, and it afforded him great relief to a lame knee.

When you introduce a moral lesson let it be brief.

Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" perfectly and permanently cures those diseases peculiar to females. It is tonic and nervine, effectually allying and curing those sickening sensations that affect the stomach and heart through reflex action. The back-ache, and "dragging-down" sensations all disappear under the strengthening effects of this great restorative. By Druggists.

That is the bitterest of all—to wear the yoke of our own wrong doing.

Our Grandmothers

taught their daughters that "a stitch in time saves nine." A pill in time saves not only nine, but ofttimes an incalculable amount of suffering as well. An occasional dose of Dr. Pierce's Pellets (Little Sugar-coated Pills), to cleanse the stomach and bowels, not only prevents diseases but often breaks up sudden attacts, when taken in time. Nature never sends a great man into the planet without confiding the secret to another soul.

In the Hour of Need

You want not to try experiments, but resort to the old and well tested means that afforded relief in the past. When your corns ache don't take the first article offered you, but find out just the thing to answer your purpose, viz., to remove the troublesome corns, and to do this without pain, and do it promptly, Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor has been used for many years. It has never been known to fail. Putnam's Extractor makes no deep holes in the flesh, hard to heal and more troublesome than the original discomforts. It works nicely and efficiently.

Whatever is becoming is honest, and whatever is honest must always be becoming.

A Remarkable Fact.

It is a remarkable fact that W. A. Edgers, of Frankville, who was so far gone with liver and kidney complaint that his life was despaired of, was cured with four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters. At one time he lay a fortnight without an operation of the bowels. (35)

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at A. Turner &Co's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at above Drug Store.

TRUE TO HER TRUST.

Too much cannot be said of the ever faithful wife and mother, constantly watching and caring for her dear ones, never neglecting a single duty in their behalf. When they are assailed by disease, and the system should have a thorough cleaning, the stomach and bowels regulated, blood purified, a malarial poison exterminated, she must know that Electric Bitters are the only sure remedy. They are the best and purest medicine in the world and only cost fifty cents. Sold by A. Turner.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

To Printers.—For Sale, a two thirds, 16 case, walnut cabinet, as good as new. Reason for selling—it is not large enough for our office. We will have to purchase another small one or sell and get a larger one. Would prefer the latter. Apply to this Office.

DYSPEPSIA & LIVER COMPLAINT.

Is it not worth the small price of 75 cents to free yourself of every symptom of these distressing complaints, if you think so call at our store and get a bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer, every bottle has a printed guarantee on it, use accordingly and if it does you no good it will cost you nothing. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store, Markdale.

OH, WHAT A COUGH!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of 50cts., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your Cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves Croup, and Whooping Cough, at once. Mothers do not be without it. For Lame Back, Side, or Chest, use Shiloh's Porous plaster. Sold at Wm. Brown's General Store Markdale.

We have a speedy and positive cure, fo Catarah, Diphtheria, Canker mouth an Head Ache, in SHHILOH'S CATARRI REMEDY. A nasal Injector free with eacr bottle. Use it if you desire health and swee breath. Price 50 cents. Sold at Wm Brown's General Store, Markdale.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEN BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. For proof of this send for a Free Book on Rupture to The Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Prescott, Ont. 132-84.

Our correspondents will do well to bear in mind that their copy will require to reach us on Tuesday, to insure an insertion the same week.

Work given out. On receipt of your address we will make an offer by which you can earn $3 to $7 evenings, at your home. Men, Woman, Boys or Girls can do it. H. C. Wilkinson & Co., 195 and 197 Fulton St., New York.

ASIATIC CHOLERA.

About the Great Plague that is Something Alarming Europe.

Past Epidemics which have Recurred at Regular Intervals.—Fearful Ravages Caused by the Disease in its Deadly Course.

The appearance in Egypt of a dreadful disease supposed to be Asiatic cholera, and the alarm announced as prevalent in Spain and evidences that it is gradually spreading west, is causing a sensation in Europe which is extending to all classes, and has resulted in the imposition of a rigid quarantine of vessels coming from the infected ports. So far the disease has only manifested itself as an epidemic at Port Said, Alexandria, Damietta, Mansurah, and perhaps one or two other Egyptian points principally on the Suez canal, but there are evidences that it is in Bombay and other Indian ports in a suppressed form, and a steamship arriving at Havre, from Bombay, had on board one case of genuine Asiatic and several cases of a milder type of the disease. All the foreign countries, save England, have put in operation their strictest laws of quarantine in accordance with a sanitary conference held at Constantinople; but, as cholera is

and difficult to suppress by any regulations of quarantine or sanitation, the feeling of uneasiness is only partially allayed by the precautions taken. As yet the disease is too incipient and too distant to cause any grave apprehensions that it will reach America, but there is sufficient danger of it so doing in the future, however distant, to give cause for speculation if not for alarm. Cholera is recognized without dispute to be a specific disease depending upon the action in the human system of a morbid material which is originally generated in certain parts of India, particularly in the delta of the Ganges and the flat lands around Madras and Bombay. The germs may be transported by clothing or other medium of transfer as those of yellow fever and small-pox are transported, and there is quite as much danger of the infection of this country as there is in the case of England or France. Hindoostan, in which cholera always originates, lies to the east and south of Europe, the prevailing direction in which the disense always advances, is to the west and north; but, as it always proceeds along the lines of the greatest and fastest travel, it often doubles back upon itself, and the time it requires to spread and the obstacles which quarantine places in its way account for its tardiness in reaching America. There are some things in the history of the cholera scourge which show how peculiar the disease is. When the French and English struggled for the Coromandel coast of India, repeated epidemics were noticed near Madras and Pondicherry in connection with the great Hindoo pilgrimages. The year 1756 marked the recognition of periodically recurring twelve yearly epidemics, connected with the great twelve yearly Hindoo festivals at the great temples. They were 1756, 1768, 1781, and 1783, 1817 and 1819, 1829 and 1831, 1841 and 1843, 1853 and 1855, and 1865 and 1867. The last epidemic closed with 1867, and the next twelfth year would have been 1879. Some theorists incline to believe that the twelve year principle for some cause or other failed of operation in 1879, and that the present year, will see a return of the scourge. The earliest reliable record of a great cholera epidemic was in 1781. On March 22nd of that year five thousand English troops under Col. Pearse, marching near Ganjam, not far from the great temple of Juggernaut, and shortly after the twelve year festival had taken place were attacked by cholera after camping on foul pilgrim grounds and drinking polluted water. Men previously healthy dropped down by dozens, and those less severely affected were past recovery in twenty-four hours. Besides those who died, there were five hundred on the sick list on the first day, and in two days more three thousand were affected. This epidemic was carried by returning pilgrims up to Calcutta and down to Madras.

SUDDENLY AND WITH INCONCEIVABLE FURY

Three times twelve, or thirty-six years subsequently, the great historical epidemic of 1817 occurred. This proceeded up the Ganges as far as Allahabad, when it was deflected southward to the province of Bundelcund, in which the Marquis of Hastings was warring against the Mahattras with ninety thousand men. The cholera crept into the camp of the army in its usual insidious manner, and in a few days the encampments and lines of march presented most deplorable spectacles. Hundreds of men dropped down with every day's advance and every night's halt, and in two weeks nine thousand men succumbed to the pestilence. From Bombay it was carried to the Persian Gulf to Bushire and Bassorah, and in the latter city eighteen thousand people died in eighteen days. It continued till 1821 when it faded out on the Mediterranean coast without touching Europe. In the meanwhile it had started in India and had spread in every direction with the march of armies, pilgrims and travellers. In 1826 the first indications of another pestilence occurred in the north of India, and this epidemic was the first which visited America as an epidemic. After traversing Asia, the disease, in 1829, reached Orenburg, in Russia, and thence proceened to Riga, on the Baltic, from which sixty or seventy English coal vessels fled in haste, carrying the cholera to Sunderland and Newcastle in England. At this time the great Polish revolution of 1830-31 was going on, and Russian troops carried the disease to Moscow, whence it was conveyed due west to Posen and Berlin, and from there to Hamburg and Ober to London. After the pestilence had prevailed in England, Ireland and Scotland it was conveyed in ten or twelve English emigrant ships to Quebec in the spring of 1832, and from there up the St. Lawrence and across the lakes to Detroit, where it met the United States troops going to the Black Hawk war. In a short time the whole force sent by way of the lakes of taking the field. It was generally believed that the infection was contracted by the soldiers on the steamboats which had previously been engaged in transporting crowds of emigrants westward from Montreal and Quebec. The cholera was distributed to all the national posts and forts in the extreme west. The next great twelve-yearly epidemic commenced in Lower Bengal, in 1841, reaching Astrachan, in Russia, July 30, 1847, or six years after its first manifestation. It was deflected westward Trebizond and Poti, on the southern and eastern coasts of the Black Sea, and from there carried over to Constantinople and Odessa, and up the Danube to Germany, whence it was carried to Holland and England. Austrian, Hungarian, and Russian armies contending in Hungary in the spring of 1849 became the principal centre and focus of the disease, whence it spread with terrible virulence into Poland and Germany.

The next and last great twelve yearly epidemic commenced in India in April, 1865, and by means of railroads and steamboats it reached Mecca and Alexandria. From there it was carried by steamships to Smyrna, Constantinople and the Black Sea to Malta, Ancona in Sicily, to Marseilles, Gibraltar, Barcelona and Algiers, Tunis, and to Southampton by the steamship Poona, July 10th. This epidemic differed from the preceding ones in the rapidity of its movements, owing to the increased commerce doubtless, and it is an unpleasant coincidence that the present wave seems to be moving in the same direction. From April to July the epidemic in 1865 traversed the distance from India to Southampton, and the present one is thought to have sent out its advance guard in the ease which arrived at Havre from Bombay on the St. Bernard. The way in which the '65 pestilence reached America was the way in which the present epidemic, if it is such, might reach here now. It was conveyed more especially up through France from Marseilles to Paris and Havre, and emigrant ships quickly transported the disease to the United States, principally to New York. From New York it was distributed in 1866 in every direction over the country by railroads and steamboats.

This is the history of the cholera from the first time it was particularly observed. Having been peculiar to India, it is supposed that it was only when communication began to be opened up between that country and Europe that it was discovered. A comparison of the epidemics of 1817 and 1832 shows that it was only when commercial relations increased between the United States and Europe that the pestilence came here. In 1866 it was proved that it was brought by emigrants, and, as in 1883 the ocean traffic has been increased to five times what it was in 1868, the dangers and opportunities of infection now are intensified five times over what they were then. The necessity for precautions, should the present scare in Europe turn out to be well founded, are manifest. Though filth and bad air have nothing to do with creating cholera, they are potent agents in fostering and causing it to bloom with more force, and the condition of the city is, therefore, an important consideration. It is generally felt that America need have no apprehension until England takes some action in the matter.

A disease so widespread and fatal has naturally engaged the attention of the scientific physicians in all countries, and, although many conflicting views have been advanced, it is generally admitted that cholera is contagious and is probably the most severe and fatal of all diseases. The prime factor, and that without which no other conditions can take effect is the introduction into the locality of the specific infecting matter, this being accomplished in general by the arrival of infected persons. A special liability of individuals is admitted at the same time, as is proved by the fact that among persons living under precisely the same conditions some will suffer and others escape, and likewise that persons inhabiting cholera districts may come to enjoy an immunity from attacks of the disease. Observations have conclusively connected outbreaks of the disease in various districts with the use of drinking water contaminated with the discharges from cholera patients.

The symptoms of cholera are diarrhœa and discharges of whey-like appearance, violent vomiting and retching and cramps of the stomach and other portions of the body. Cramps of the feet, legs, and muscles of the abdomen occasion great agony while make their appearance. The surface of the body becomes cool and assumes a blue or purple hue; the skin is dry, sodden, and wrinkled, indicating the intense draining away of the fluid of the body; the features are pinched, and the eyes deep-sunken; the pulse at the wrist is imperceptible, and the voice is reduced to a hoarse whisper. There is great thirst and complete suppression of the urine. In this condition death often takes place in less than one day, but in epidemics cases are frequently observed where the collapse is so sudden and complete as to prove fatal in one or two hours, even without any previous purging or vomiting. The bodies of persons dying of cholera are found to remain long warm, and the temperature may even rise after death. As illustrating the destructive effects of the disease, the deaths in England and Wales during the first epidemic were 52,547, and in the second epidemic—1848-49—55,181 in England alone. The disease is no respector of persons, and it attacks the clean and dirty alike. Sanitary measures alone can check its spread, and these oftentimes are ineffectual.

A minister asked some children: "Why do we say 'our Father who art in heaven,' since God is everywhere?" A little drummer boy answered. "Because its head quarters."

We have heard a good deal first and last about the coming man, but has not heretofore been able to form any very definite conception of what he would be. His notions of human progress had, however, led him to suppose that when the long-looked-for came, he would be a paragon of perfection—a decided improvement upon all the men who have actually come upon the stage of human history. In this, however, We have been mistaken. If the coming man is identical with "the man of the future," the conception of whom has been evolved from the scientific inner consciousness, the coming man is to be no improvement upon the man who has already come. He will be, we are told, "a toothless, hairless, slow-limbed animal, incapable of extended locomotion. His feet will have no division between the toes." Even the added fact concerning him, namely, that "he will be very averse to fighting," does not altogether reconcile one to him. We, for one, decidedly prefers the man of the present to the man of the future, if this prophecy of him be correct.

LOUIS RIEL.

THE REBEL PAYS A VISIT TO WINNIPEG. HIS REMINISCENCES OF 1870.

He Defends his Action, even to the Killing of Scott.

Louis Riel, the ex-outlaw, who is now located in Louis Clark County, Montana, returned for a brief visit to Winnipeg, recently. He was interviewed by a Sun reporter, and gave some interesting reminiscences of Red River troubles of 1870. Riel is thus described:—He wore a black slouched hat, beneath which was a full face, with broad forehead and keen brown eyes of marked intellectuality. His black curly hair was rather shorter than that worn by the average half-breed. He has a full beard, pointed, of a darkish brown color. He has a straight, large, prominent, well-shaped nose, and an expressive mouth. He speaks English very well, and is most particular in his choice of words. He has extraordinary self-possession, but when relating some stirring fact or exciting reminiscence his eyes danced and glistened in a manner that rivetted attention.

HE DEFENDS HIS ACTIONS.

"Thirteen years have passed," said the reporter, "since the troubles occurred here, and time brings about wonderful changes. Now looking at the events of that day, after a lapse of thirteen years, do you not now regard your action in a different light from what you did then; and if the circumstances were to occur again would you not act very differently?"

"I am more and more convinced every day that, without a single exception I did right. Of course I don't mean to say my conduct was perfect on all occasions, because every man is liable to make trifling mistakes, bnt had I the same thing to go through again I would do exactly the same. If the people of Canada only knew the grounds on which we acted, and the circumstances under which we were, they would be most forward in acknowledging that I was right in the course I took. And I have always believed that, as I have acted honestly, the time will come when the people of Canada will see and acknowledge it."

THE MURDER OF SCOTT.

"Even to the execution of Scott?"

"I would just as soon you would not make any mention of it, as I do not wish to revive any old feuds; but at the same time in saying that I thoroughly approve of my past conduct I honestly include that act also."

"Suppose the Archbishop had been home in 1870 would Scott have been executed?"

"Perhaps ten Scotts would have been shot had he been home."

"Why?"

"Because I was really the leader, and whenever I believe myself to be right no man has ever changed my opinion. The Archbishop could not have prevented it, no matter what influence he might have used he could not have changed my opinion in the least. The Council acted honestly in condemning Scott, and had Archbishop Tache been here and used his influence he would have been powerless."

"Who was the priest then?"

"Father Lestance."

"Did he try to prevent it?"

"Yes, but he could do nothing."

"Why did you select Scott?"

"I did not select him."

"He was drawn by lot?"

"I do not wish to speak of that. Scott was about the fourth man in influence and prominence amongst the leaders. They were out of our grasp. I do not mean to say that we would have executed them, but they were more in danger than Scott. They were more guilty, too, though Scott was guilty enough."

"Did you converse with Scott before he was executed?"

"I sent for him when he was in captivity in the fort. I told him he was conspiring with other men. I also told him that if he had not been careful that evening he would have been killed for trying to murder the guard we placed on him."

"Did he try to kill the guard?"

"Yes, he seized a bayonet that was in the room and endeavored to slay the guard by plunging it into him through an opening in the door of the guard-room. He was always hot-headed and violent. I will tell you one of his crazy acts. A man named Parisien, a follower af his, was taken prisoner by us, but afterwards escaped. He went back to Scott's camp, near Kildonan, and Scott, thinking he was a spy, took a strong scarf, tied one end around Parisien's neck and the other to the tail of his (Scott's) horse. Scott then jumped on the horse and galloped about a quarter of a mile, dragging the poor victim in this way till it was thought he was choked to death. He recovered sufficiently to make his escape, but Scott's followers pursued him; catching him, they beat and cut him in such a manner that he was left for dead."

WHERE WAS SCOTT'S BODY BURIED?

After further conversation Riel was asked if Scott ever pleaded for pardon, to which he replied in the negative.

"Where was his body buried?"

"I have always declined to answer that question."

"Was it thrown into the river?"

"It might have been, but I am not supposed to know, and in fact don't know."

Continuing, Mr. Riel said:—"The Government had its day, and a man is supposed to have his. I can now say that I never obeyed. It is no want of respect on my part. I acknowledge the men who are in authority. At the same time when I speak of the past, I affirm that I was right. I had no one to obey, and I did my duty."

SIR GARNET'S CHASE OF RIEL.

"When Sir Garnet Wolseley came up why did not you surrender? Did you see him?"

"I saw him from the south side of the Assiniboine River, when he was on the other side."

"Did you never speak to him?"

"No. I knew he would murder me if he caught me, and I always kept ahead of him, so as to give him a chance to arrest me, if he wished to do so."

"He did not know where you were?"

"When a General comes on such an expedition it is not the duty of the enemy to reveal his whereabouts, but it is the duty of that General to find out, and so General Wolseley should have found out where I was. I was only about a furlong ahead of him all the time."

"How did you manage to keep ahead of him?"

"When he came in at one door at Winnipeg I went out the other. I wanted to keep just far enough away from his soldiers so that they would have no pretext for raising a fuss or any trouble. While Wolseley was in the fort, I was talking to Archbishop Tache at his place on the other side of the river. While he (Wolseley) was speaking to his soldiers in front of the fort, I passed by on horseback, along the road, very quietly. I heard them calling the half-breeds bandits."

"Did the Archbishop advise you to go away?"

"He left me to myself and told me to do what I thought best."

A QUEEN OF THE STAGE.

"Her Second Love," and the Important Secret She Reveals for the Benefit of Women.

New York World

Several years ago the American public were aroused by the entree upon the stage of a little lady who had been previously but little announced. She was one of an innumerable number of aspirants for public favor and had no instrumentality, aside from her own talents to cause recognition. In spite of this fact, however, she quickly achieved a warm place in the heart of the public which she has continued to hold ever since. When it was announced, therefore, that Miss Maude Granger would star the coming season in the play "Her Second Love," written by Mr. John A. Stevens, it was only natural that unusual interest should be manifested not only in theatrical circles, but in other branches of the community. This was specially the case, as it was known that Miss Granger had, for the past year, been in exceedingly delicate health, and the determination to star in a strong emotional play was the more surprising. One of the staff of this paper was accordingly deputized to see the popular lady and verify the rumor or announce its incorrectness.

Miss Granger's countenance is familiar to nearly every one in the United States. It is a face once seen never to be forgotten. Features remarkable in their outline and contour are surmounted by a pair of large deep eyes indicative of the greatest soul power. It is easy to see where Miss Granger obtains the ability to portray characters of the most emotional nature. She possesses within herself the elements of feeling without which no emotion can be conveyed to an audience. The man of news found the lady at her home in this city and was accorded a quiet welcome. It was evident at once that she was in greatly improved health, which the expression and color of her countenance both indicated.

"Is it true Miss Granger that you contemplate a starring tour the coming season?"

"Yes, indeed. My season begins in Chicago on the 16th of July. From there I go to San Francisco and then play the remainder of the season through the eastern and western states."

"Are you confident your health will permit such an undertaking?"

A ringing laugh was the first reply to this question, after which she said:

"Certainly. It is true that I have been ill for the past two years, but now I am wholly recovered. Few people can have any idea of the strain a conscientious actress undergoes in essaying an emotional part. It is necessary to put one's whole soul into the work in order to rightly portray the character. This necessitates an utter abandonment of one's personality and an assumption of the character portrayed. If this is an emotional part it is necessary to feel the same emotions the part is supposed to feel. For more than a year I actually cried each night in certain passages of a part I was playing. The audience considered it art. Probably it was, but those were none the less real tears and the effect was none the less trying upon my health."

"But do you anticipate avoiding this in the future?"

"Not in the least. I expect to have just as great a strain as before but with restored health and a knowledge of how to retain it I do not fear."

"You speak of a 'knowledge of how to retain health.' Will you please explain what you mean by that?"

"You must be aware that women by their very natures are subject to troubles and afflictions unknown to the sterner sex. The name of these troubles is legion, but in whatever form they may come they are weaknesses which interfere with every ambition and hope in life. I believe thousands of noble women are to-day suffering agonies of which even their best friends and relatives know little or nothing, and when I reflect upon it I confess it makes me sad. Now all this misery arises largely from an ignorance of the laws of life or a neglect to carefully observe them. I speak from the depths of a bitter experience in saying this, and I am thankful I know the means of restoration, and how to remain in perfect health."

"Please explain more fully."

"Well, I have found a remedy which seems specially adapted for this very purpose. It is pure and palatable and controls the health and life as, I believe, nothing else will. It is really invaluable and if all the women in America were to use it I am quite sure most of the suffering and many deaths might be avoided."

"What is this wonderful remedy?"

"Warner's Safe Cure."

"And you use it?"

"Constantly,"

"And hence believe you will be able to go through the coming season successfully?"

"I am quite certain of it."

"A few questions more, Miss Granger. Will you please give me a list of the parts you have created and the plays you have taken part in since your first appearance in public?"

"I first played for some time with the amateurs in New York and Brooklyn. I then went to the Union Square Theatre for two seasons, after that to the Boston Globe for one season and then to Booth's Theatre, in this city. Next I supported John McCullough and afterwards starred in Juliet, Camille, Rosalind, etc. Subsequently I created the part of Cicely Blaine in the Galley Slave and also starred in Two Nights in Rome, playing the part of Antonia. The past year I have been playing in the Planter's Wife and the coming season, as I have said, will be devoted to Her Second Love."

As the writer was returning home he fell into a train of musing and wondered if all the women in this land who are suffering could only know Miss Granger's experience and the remarkable results achieved by the pure remedy she used, how much suffering might be avoided and how much happiness secured.

One hundred and sixteen deaths from cholera at Damietta, forty-seven at Mansurah, six at Shirbin, and ten at Sammond, were reported recently.

Mr. Trevelyan stated in the Imperial Commons that the Government had temporarily stopped emigration from certain districts in Ireland.

Judge O'Brien, addressing the Grand Jury at Limerick, declared that the diminution in the number of outrages since last Assizes amounted to a social revolution.

A rumour is current in Vienna, Rome and Paris that Count de Chambford has declared in his will that the legitimate successor must keep the white flag of Henry IV.

THE DUBLIN DETECTIVE.

Lured to Certain Assassination by an Invincible Whom He Had Befriended.

Mr. Mallen, the superintendent of the Dublin detective force, to whom is chiefly due the credit of the detection and punishment of the Invincibles, has been awarded £1,000, and will receive promotion. One incident which is up to the present known to but few, will carry a good deal of the danger he underwent from the Invincibles, who perfectly well knew his ability and determination, and the necessity of sending him to the grave. While a coercion act, known as the protection of person and property act, was in operation, under which any suspected person might without trial be kept in gaol for two years, James Mullett, one of the four chiefs of the Invincibles, was arrested as a "suspect" and confined in Dundalk gaol. After he had been kept there for some time he received news that one of his children was dying of scarlet fever. He petitioned to be allowed to see his child before it died, and on the earnest recommendation of Supt. Mallen, to whom he had appealed, was permitted to come to Dublin and visit his child. He expressed the warmest gratitude to the superintendent, and declared that he would never forget the kindness that had been done him. He, however, had no personal interview with Mr. Mallen, who from that time heard nothing from him until some time after the Phœnix park murders, when Mullett, who was then at liberty and at home, wrote to him, asking him to meet him at a certain place at Glasnevin, a suburb of Dublin, saying he had something to tell him, and again referring in terms of warm gratitude to the very great kindness he had previously received from the superintendent. Mallen, well knowing that Mullett was foremost among the Fenians and in that other secret society to which the police had some clew, and believing that possibly the man wished to make some disclosures to him, and considering that in consequence of what he had done for Mullett, no harm, at all events, was meant for him, replied by letter that he would keep the appointment. On the day arranged he set out for the trysting spot which he reached within about a quarter of a mile when on the road he chanced to meet his brother, who is also on the police. In casual conversation his brother observed: "I have just seen James Mullett and a half dozen of the boys down the road, and they can not be about any good." The brothers then parted, but the superintendent, becoming suspicious from what had been said, turned into the next public-house and there waited events. After some time Mullett entered and reproached Mallen for not having kept his appointment, and endeavored to persuade him to go on to the rendezvous, where, he said, they could talk freely. Mallen, however, refused to leave the public-house, his suspicion of harm being strengthened by Mullett's manner, and finally the conspirator took his departure, declaring that it would not be safe for him to speak there on the matter on which he had intended. Mallen then returned homeward. Had he in the first place kept the appointment or had he afterward yielded to the solicitations of Mullett, he would never have returned alive that day, for it had been arranged to assassinate him at the appointed meeting place—a lonely portion of the road.—*Cor. Never Forget Anything.

Chaage your mind with your duty. That is largely the true definition of faithfulness. Bad memory and mistakes are used as apologies a great deal oftener than necessary. A boy beginning business life will generally lose his place who pleads such an excuse more than once or twice.

A successful business man says there were two things which he learned when he was eighteen, which were afterwards of great use to him, namely, "never to lose anything, and never to forget anything." An old lawyer sent him with an important paper, with certain instructions what to do with it.

"But," inquired the young man, "suppose I lose it; what shall I do then?"

The answer was with the utmost emphasis, "You must not lose it!"

"I don't mean to," said the young man, "but suppose I should happen to?"

"But I say you must not happen to! I shall make no provision for any such occurrence. You must not lose it!"

This put a new train of thought into the young man's mind, and he found that if he was determined to do a thing he could do it. He made such provision against every contingency that he never lost anything. He found this equally true about forgetting. If a certain matter of importance was to be remembered, he pinned it down on his mind, fastened it there, and made it stay.

The Romance of the German Emperor's Early Love.

Before leaving Berlin for Ems the German Emperor paid a visit to Fraulein von Schœrf, who had not been in Berlin for many years. Fraulein von Schœrf is the old lady to whose apartment on the third floor the Emperor climbs daily and takes his coffee when he is in Wiesbaden. Fraulein von Schœrf was a maid of honor at the Prussian court when the youthful Prince William took part in some tableaux vivants, which were arranged after scenes in "Lalla Rookh," during the festivities which followed the marriage of his sister Charlotte with the Emperor Nicholas. One of the young ladies who figured in these tableax vivants was the Princess Radziwill, celebrated for her beauty, who, it was said at the time, died of a broken heart, because Prince William was not allowed by his family to marry her. Fraulein von Schœrf was in the confidence of the two lovers, and the Emperor has kept up a friendship with her ever since.

The Abyssinians have a curious tradition as to the custom of burying the dead. They say that when Adam found the body of the murdered Abel he carried it about upon his shoulders for twenty days, not knowing how to dispose of it. The Almighty took pity on him, and sent forth a crow with a dead young one on its back. The crow flew before Adam until it came to a track of sandy ground, in which it dug a hole with its feet, and there buried its young one. When Adam he saw this he dug a grave in the sand and buried his dead boy in it.

A FENIAN WAR FLOTILLA.

Successful Dynamite Exhibition on the Hudson.

An Old Vessel Blown to Pieces and Threats of Terrible War Made Against England.

A Fenian fleet sailed up the Hudson River recently carring members of districts A, B, and C of the Clan-Na-Gael to witness the destructive influence of dynamite when applied to the bottom of a ship. The affair was organized by the direction of the United Brotherhood after the conviction in London of Dr. Gallagher and his associates. The members of the Clan-Na-Gael in this vicinity became dissatisfied with the workings of the organization and the constant failures of all attempts to injure the British Government. The leaders resolved to give the members of the society a chance to witness a practical test of the power of dynamite. Five barges and three tugs comprised the flotilla. Less than a hundred persons left on the Brooklyn barge and half that number was all that left Jersey City. When the five barges came together in the North River they looked dreary, and all the excursionists could have found room in one barge.

ON THE HUDSON.

The excursionists seemed determined men. They talked war all the way up the river, and many of them were heard to say that the practical results of the excursion would soon be felt in England. They stood in knots of twos and fours and spoke in whispers. Often they gesticulated violently and seemed to have divided opinions about some project that is on foot, One of them said to another: "I'll never stir a foot. I believe English detectives know every move we make."

When the Fenian fleet was nearing Englewood programmes of the dynamite exhibition were given out. The bills stated in future rubber armour and dynamite would be the principal features of naval warfare, and that a practical exhibition of their qualities would be given just above Englewood, concluding with the destruction of a full-rigged vessel.

PLAYING HAVOC WITH DYNAMITE.

Half a mile above Englewood the flotilla came to anchor about an eighth of a mile above the Jersey shore. The steamer Birbeck was anchored at a dock, and had on board the members of the Fenian Directory. About twenty rods from the shore an old three-masted ship was anchored. It was loaded with twenty-five tons of sand, and it was expected that two pounds of dynamite would blow it to atoms. Previous to this exhibition members of the Clan-na-Gael, under the guidance of Captain Paul Boynton, paddled around in rubber suits. Rockets were fired from the water, carrier pigeons were sent up with suppositious messages, repeating rifles were loaded and discharged by the men in rubber suits, and two small row boats were destroyed by torpedoes.

Then came the great exhibition. Colonel Kerwin, high in the order of the Clan-Na-Gael, went in a boat to the doomed ship. Mr. Kerwin examined the boat minutely. He spoke to his aides, and they gave a signal to a man in a rubber suit who came alongside on a raft, and attached to the stern of the vessel a torpedo containing two pounds of dynamite. The torpedo looked exactly like a cannon when not mounted on wheels. It had a long, smooth bore, and was covered on the outside with sheet-iron or zinc. It was fastened to the stern of the vessel by a spear, and was about five feet long and weighed about five pounds. There was a moment of suspense. Then a puff of smoke was seen and instantly after twenty-five thousand tons of sand and as many tons of water went up in a straight column 200 feet in the air. Above the mud and water could be seen a myriad of sparks with thousands of pieces of wood, and above all a column of smoke. Some of the wood must have ascended 150 yards. The biggest piece that came down would not cover the seat of a chair.

The column of water and sand was twenty feet in width, and it went up with lightning rapidity. The spectators were awed into silence at first, and then a mighty cheer went up that echoed and re-echoed through the palisades. The most singular part of the affair was the lack of any sound made by the explosion. There was no detonation whatever. Simply a puff of smoke, then the sudden ascending of the vast masts followed by the violent splash as the debris struck the water. The whole affair from the time the fuse was applied did not take five seconds. There were thousands of pieces of wood, each as small as a nickle, scattered on the water, but not a shred of the sails could be seen.

JOURNEYING HOME.

There was great jollification on the homeward journey, and the leaders felt elated. Though no money was made, the success was so great that the members do not mind the financial failure. One of them said:

"The members are ripe for action. They have demanded that work be done, and the leaders have consented. There is $100,000 in the treasury, and England will be startled soon. There will be no traitors this time. We are ripe and ready."

A Twenty-one Mile Trestle.

Recently, a party interested in the building of the New Orleans and Northeastern Railroad took a trip across Lake Pontchartrain for the purpose of examining the great trestlework now in course of construction. The entire length of the trestlework, when completed, will be twenty-one miles. This structure, which probably will be the longest of the kind in the United States, will also be one of the most substantial. The piles average sixty feet in length and are driven about forty feet. In each bent there are four piles, and the bents are fifteen feet apart. The caps of the piles are twelve by thirteen inches, and the stringers are six by sixteen inches, and three of them on each side laid on edge. The cross ties are only four inches apart, and on them are bolted stringers, which act as guard rail. The ties form a secure decking to the trestlework, upon which the wheels of the car run without danger of leaving the bridge on account of the guard rails.

The trestlework, from beginning to end, is one of the grandest undertakings connected with railroad building in the South. Some idea of its magnitude may be formed from the statement that the quantity of lumber required, outside of the piles, is over 15,000,000 feet.

DRAGGED UP BY TOY BALLOONS.

The Remarkable Adventure of a Child.

The three-year old daughter of Mrs. R. Elliott was brought to Morehead City, N.C., a month ago to recover from an attack of fever. Recently a strolling Italian made his appearance with a large cluster of those red bladder-like toy balloons. Major Hawkins, of Alabama, to amuse the child Birdie, tied the cord around her waist, and then, as is often done to amuse the children, gave her a toss of five or six feet in the air, and held out his hands for her return. "Great God! she is gone," cried the Major, as he saw that she was going rapidly up, up, until she had passed the house-tops. Floating in the clouds with outstretched hands, the little angel could be heard distinctly calling "Mamma! Mamma!" until her voice became drowned by the whistling of the winds.

"All to your boats!" shouted old Captain Dixon, "and never a son of a man turn back until that child is brought to its mammy!"

Minutes appeared as hours and the babe was flying south-east like a kite, and would be out over the Atlantic in less than no time. Away went twenty or more well manned boats amid the shouts of men and screams of women and children. These boats were joined by a like number from Beaufort, all of which kept as near under the little angel in the cloud as possible. Mr. Charles J. Voorhees, of the Southern Express Company, with a party of gentlemen, were out taking a sail. Mr. Voorhees is one of the most expert riflemen in the country, and had on board his Smith & Wesson rifle.

"Bang!" went the rifle—but no change in position. Again, again, and again—at the fifth shot one balloon disappeared amid the shouts of the boatmen. At the eighth shot it became evident that the balloons could no longer carry the weight of the little floating angel, as she was gradually descending not in a straight line, but in a south-east direction—toward Harker Island—but whether dead or alive none could tell. Down, down, down she comes, as gently as if handled by human hands, and to fall in a cradle of sand.

To land, to land, and all put to shore as fast as the sails would propel the boats. Then began the race for the baby, and she had come down on a sand bank only a few hundred yards distant. With fear and trembling all ran up, Ben Piver in front. "Gentlemen," says he, "she's alive and kicking. There sat little Birdie, playing with a lot of shells, and as she was picked up, she clung to a handful, saying, "Dese sels for mamma."

At the wharf, after everything seemed safe, then little Birdie came the nearest of losing her life. Col. Whittord, a man of generous impulses, seized the little angel in his arms, and at a lightning speed started for its mother, who was then lying in an unconscious state under the skilful care of Drs Haywood, Arendall, and Kelly, of Louisiana. But before the kind-hearted Colonel had gone far, amid the dense crowd and confusion, he ran off the wharf into the water eight feet deep. Several jumped overboard and aided him in landing his prize. The child was none the worse for its ducking — Philadelphia Press

Hog Against Rattlesnake.

A friend tells us of a fight he witnessed, last week, between a rattlesnake and a hog. To use his own language; "I had just started up the steep hill beyond Toms creek, going to Roans creek, when my attention was attracted to a hog near the road, champing and walking around with bristles erect, with two smaller hogs some few feet away looking on. Reigning to a better view I saw a good size rattlesnake coiled, head erect, and his rattles sounding the note of anger. The sow, with head down and bristles erect, was slowly walking around the snake, champing her teeth together and the foam running from her mouth. Presently the snake struck at her but missed his aim, the sow springing to one side at the moment the snake struck. Instantly the snake was again coiled and his rattle ringing. The sow renewed her circling, the snake following, with his head always following the hog. Soon he struck again and fastened his fangs on her jaw below the ear. She raised her head and the snake was fastened to her. Instantly she caught the snake in her mouth, put her feet on his tail and stripped the skin up. Renewing her foot-hold on the body of the snake, she took another pull and tore the snake in two, and then, tearing off a part of the quivering snake, she complacently set to eating it up. The other two hogs now advanced, but the sow took up the pieces of the snake and walked off a few steps, and set to finishing the feast. I had seen enough and rode on."—Linden (Tenn.) Times.

The Vulgar Girl.

Should the novelist go into the highways and resorts of the world to study reality, he will find many a daughter of the gods, divinely tall and most divinely fair, who, when her lips are opened, will dispel the charm of her presence and bring to mind the old fairy-tale of the damsel from whose lips dropped toads and snakes at every word; who acknowledges no law of etiquette but her own whim, whose standard of regard to others is her own convenience; whose greatest virtue is indifference, and whose best charm absence. It is true that at summer resorts there are charming and lovely girls, but their refined presence is completely overshadowed by the pushing, noisy vulgarity of the roystering girl of the period, the girl whose family is often excellent, whose advantages socially and educationally have been all that position and wealth could command, yet who remains to the end vulgar, selfish and obtrusive.—Boston Courier.

The cynosure of all eyes at a recent fancy ball at the Countess of Stanhope's, in London, was the niece of Mr. Lowell. The most wonderful things about Miss Emerson were, it seems, the shoes she wore upon her tiny feet, adorned with insteps "too aristocratically arched" for a fair republican. These shoes were made of yellow Spanish velvet, with high French heels, and laced up the side. The eyelids for the cords to pass through were rimmed with solid gold, and to the side of each was set a precious stone first a ruby, then a sapphire, then an emerald, then an opal, and over again in the same order. The top of the shoe was finished in the same fashion, and in front were sixteen tiny gold chains, caught by a cluster diamond pin.

THE FARMER'S CORNER.

Farm Notes and Seasonable Hints.

(From the American Agriculturist.)

Cutting Grass for Hay.

It was once a saying among farmers, and may be so still to some extent, that grass ought to be cut as close as possible to the ground; for it was so much thicker at the bottom, that an inch there was worth two or more at the top. This may be true or not, according to circumstance, and the kind and quality of the grass to be cut. If it be the natural growth on the broad meadows of the Connecticut, or similar river bottoms, or a very fine-stalked variety, like June grass, or the short-growing white clover, then an inch at the base may be worth two at the top. If it is Timothy, orchard, or any other coarse-stalked grass, or red clover, then two to four inches at the bottom may not be worth one at the top, especially if left standing until past blossoming and seed begins to form.

Coarse, rank grasses are usually divested of leaves near the ground when attaining their full growth; and if they are cut close, the stubs are left so short as to be no protection against the hot summer sun. If dry weather follows for a few weeks subsequently, it will greatly injure the grass, and sometimes kill it. When protection is left by not cutting too close, a fair second growth is ensured, which, if not sufficient by autumn, for rowen or pasture, it will be at least a good protection for the roots during the winter, and give an earlier start in spring and a better crop in haying time.

The invention of mowing machines has given the farmers a great advantage in harvesting their grass, for they can so set the bars and cutting knives, etc., of these, as to cut high or low, as desired. There is a considerable difference of opinion still existing among farmers as to the best time for cutting their grass for hay. Some contend, if for milch cows, it should be cut before the grass begins to blossom, if for the other kinds of stock, at the time of flowering, while some contend that for horses the seed should be nearly ripe. In order to settle this point satisfactorily, it would be well for the Agricultural Colleges to extend their careful experiments with the various grasses and clover, cut at three to four different stages of growth.

An Effectual Insect Killer.

Kerosene, showered upon plants, is very penetrating, and destroys insects in all stages of development, even to to the eggs. Two parts of kerosene to one of sour milk is a proper proportion. If fresh milk is not at hand, condensed milk, diluted to the same strength, may be employed. This mixture is successfully used for the scale insect in the orange groves of Florida, and can be, it is thought, employed to destroy Chinch-bugs. A mixture of water and three per cent of kerosene is deadly to the bugs, and does no harm to the growing corn. By spraying a few outside rows, nearest a ripening field of wheat, the whole area of corn can be protected from the second brood of the destructive Chinch-bug. The apparatus for the cheapest and best application of the emulsion is yet to be devised. Doubtless a sprinkler drawn by two horses could be made, that, by passing between the rows of corn, would spray them quickly and effectively.

All farmers seriously troubled with insects should give kerosene a trial. By using a cheap grade of petroleum, the expense is small, and, with the necessary apparatus for applying the emulsion, a safe and successful war may be waged against the insect enemies. Much depends upon promptness and energy: therefore, the farmer should be prepared to act at the earliest warning. A barrel of kerosene, and a garden force-pump, with necessary attachment, ready for use, may comes to be as essential a part of a well-eqipped farm, or fruit and vegetable garden, as fire extinguishers in a city. Try the mixture on a small area, to determine the proper strength. It may be that one proportion is best for the Potato-beetle, and another for the Cabbage-worms, etc.; but the emulsion must never be so strong as to injure the plants upon which it is sprayed.

The Farm Dairy.

In the average farm dairy, too little attention is given to the management of milk. The introduction of what may be termed "the home-made creamery system," has proved a wonderful boon to many farmers. Such as do not invest in the patented creameries, need some artificial method for keeping the milk and cream at a proper temperature. A neighboring farmer has for several years kept milk in a cellar-tank, which is supplied from an adjoining pond of pure water. Into this water-tank, cans, 20 inches deep, are set so that the water comes to within two inches of the top, and they are left uncovered, to allow the animal heat to pass off. A thermometer, occasionally plunged into the water enables him to regulate the temperature, which should be at about 62 degrees, and as a result, the cream rises, to a depth of from two to three inches, in the can. The tank was built, and water conducted to it, at a small expense, which has been amply repaid, as the quantity of cream greatly exceeds that produced by the old method, of setting in shallow pans. By some such means as this the farm dairy may be made a profitable adjunct to general farming.

Bee Notes for July.

Apiarists are now in the midst of the midst of the honey harvest. The white clover is hardly gone, the incomparable sweet clover is yet in bloom, and the basswood flowers are opening stores of enticing nectar. Beekeepers who are working for comb honey should furnish abundant sections, that the bees will not lack room. Crowding at this season means swarming and loss. If the finest honey is desired, the sections must be removed as soon as filled, and capped over. If extracted honey is the aim, it should be extracted frequently. In no case should this be deferred longer than when the bees begin to cap over the honey. Extracted honey should always be kept in a dry, warm atmosphere, and then even thin honey will ripen and be equal to that which was capped over by the bees. The different grades of extracted honey should be kept separate. Clover, raspberry, and basswood honey are all so much alike that, to mix them, will do no harm; but never should the dark nectar of autumn be mixed with the light honey of summer. Higher prices will be obtained by keeping each kind of honey by itself.

MARKDALE, JULY 12TH, 1883.

FICTION

At no period in the History of the world has fiction held so prominent a position as a factor for good or evil as it does at present, true, its importance and powerful influence has, from the earliest ages, been recognized, but never has it occupied so important a place as it does to-day. The necessity therefore of a continuous supply of pure fiction to counteract the pernicious influence of the demoralizing class of stories which has, unfortunately, so widespread a circulation, is patent to the most superficial thinker. In this matter the STANDARD has aimed at the best. The class of fiction to be found in its colums from week to week will bear comparison with anything published. Its stories are pure in tone, elevating in their influence, and are written by writers of acknowledged ability, whose names are well and favorably known in the world of literature. In this connection we would direct attention to the new Serial "Stella," which commenced last week. It is powerfully written, facinating in plot, and pure in tone, and will be found deeply interesting in the phases of human life and motives depicted.

DARING BURGLARY AT COLLINGWOOD.

COLLINGWOOD, July 4.—Last night a daring Burglary was committed here by men who evidently understood their business. The safe of Messrs. Best and Nettleton, liquor dealers, and two safes of B. Callary's Glasgow House, were opened by drilling small holes close to the combinations, then using powder to break the combination. Messrs. Best and Nettleton suffer to the extent of $100, together with valuable papers, and Mr Calary's loss was $200 in cash. During the night Mr. Calary, who sleeps directly over Best & Nettletton's store, fancied he heard some great noise, but paid no attention to it, and was greatly surprised this morning on going to his store to find that he was minus $200 and his two safes destroyed. The matter has been taken in hand by the proper authorities, and what small clues ascertained, telegraphed to different towns and cities. Strange to say the doors of each store were bolted and locked as left by the proprietors the night before. The burglars must have effected an enterance by skeleton keys.

DONE FOR.

One of those happy events which, in this Canada of ours, seldom comes more than once in a life time, took place at the residence of J.W Armstrong, Esq., Flesherton, on Thursday last the 5th when his eldest daughter Miss Jennie was joined in the holy bands of matrimony to Mr. J. D. Clarke, assistant Editor of the Hamilton Times, Rev. Mr. D. C. McDowell, chairman of the Owen Sound District of the C. M. Church, performed the ceremony, the bride was waited upon by Miss Aikenhead, of Toronto and Miss Lazier, of Belville, and Mr. Clarke was "stayed" by Mr. H. B. Walker, of Walkerton, and Dr. Armstrong, of Markdale, brother of the bride. After a reception the usual congratulations were tenderd by the large number of friends present, everyone appeared brim full of happiness, the bride and groom being no exception to the rule. The presents were of a superior quality, and very numerous. The young couple took the afternoon train for Chicago, Philadelphia, New York and other cities across the lines. The very best wishes of the community go with them, and we have no doubt, judging from what we know of the amiable couple, that a happy and prosperous life is before them.

Cholera is spreading its ravages in Egypt at present. The town of Damietta is in a fearfull state, surrounded by a cordon of soldiers, who entirely obstruct all access or egress, with people dying at the rate of hundreds in a day and starvation staring the poor inder in the face.

BLEST.

Blest be the tongue that speaks no ill,
Whose words are always true,
That keeps "the law of kindness" still
Whatever others do.

Blest be the ears that will not hear
Detraction's envious tales;
'Tis only through the list'ning ear
That falsehood can prevail.

Blest be the heart that knows no guile,
That feels no wish unkind,
Forgetting provocation, while
Good deeds are kept in mind.

Blest be the hands that toil to aid
The great World's ceaseless need—
The hands that never are afraid
To do a kindly deed.

Blest be the thoughtful brain that schemes
A beautiful idael;
Mankind grows great through noble dreams
And time will make them real.

Do good in thought. Some future day
'Twill ripen into speech;
And words are seeds that grow to deeds,
None know how far they reach.

Like thistle down upon the breeze,
Swift scattered here and there,
So words will travel far, and these
A fruitful haryest bear.

Where goodness dwells in heart and mind
Both words and deeds will be
Like cords that closer draw mankind
In peace and charity.

PIC-NIC AT FLESHERTON STATION.

Last Thursday a very successful pic-nic was held at the Orange Hall, Flesherton Station, in aid of the Sunday School Library of that place. Mr. Hogg as Superintendent, presided, and Mrs. Doupe, prepared the viands, for which that Lady deserves much praise for their rare delicacy and flavour. After doing ample justice to the "goodies," recitations, dialogues, and select pieces of music were sang, in which Mrs. W. Mitchell ably assisted, rendering the occasion one of the happiest we have attended in many a day. It would be impossible to particularize where all acted their several parts so well, no doubt the most interesting part to many of the yungsters was Mr. Mitchell's "Hobby Horses," which this gentleman generously placed at the disposal of the young people—success to your efforts, friends.

OBITUARY.

It becomes our duty this week to chronicle the death of an old and highly respected citizen in the person of Mr. Samuel Coleman, sr., who departed this life on Saturday the 7th inst. Mr. Coleman was born in Kildare Co., Ireland in the year 1810 leaving him 74 years of age at his death. He emigrated to Canada in the year 1833, settling in Leeds Co. and 20 years later he removed to his late residence, Artemesia Tp., where he resided up to his death. This section of country was a dense forest thirty years ago when Mr. C. settled here, the first settlers being but three or four years in the Township previous. None but those who have experienced it can tell the amount of hardships and privations the pioneers of this country had to endure. The subject of this sketch was, however, an industrious, pushing and frugal farmer, was always foremost in farming operations, and by many years of hard toil and indomitable energy in clearing the forest and cultivating the soil, became the possessor of a beautiful farm and comfortable home. His family are grown up and well-to-do, while his highly respected and much beloved partner in life passed on before some eight years ago. Mr. Colemau lost his health some two years ago and has since suffered very much with dyspepsia, which was the cause of his death. He was kind hearted, a loving father and obliging neighbor, and his remains were followed to their last resting place, in the English Church Cemetery on Monday by a large concourse of friends and acquaintances.

The union of the Methodist churches of this country has at length become an assured fact so far as it can be made such by the action of the local church courts of the largest of these bodies. The basis has received the endorsation of nearly nine-tenths of the Qurterly meetings of the Methodist Church of Canada, and of five-sixths of existing Annual Conferences. The conference which is to be organized in Manitoba early next month will, it is believed, vote pretty nearly solid for it, and in that case proportion in favor of it will be six-sevenths. This result, after all the efforts, fair and foul, which have been made by a certain class of "leading" ministers—from whom the public had a right to look for bet er things—must be highly satisfactory to the prosecutors of the measure.

Mr. Bryan of the Mansion House has subscribed $9, and we understand Mr. Byrnes of the Revere has also subscribed liberally, this is very encouraging, and we have no doubt such liberality will be rewarded.

The railway authorities have signified their intention of putting down a plank side walk from the station to meet the village walk, and will put in a small gate for foot passengers at the entrance, and intend having it done shortly. Now we want one thing more on the part of our village trustees, that is, a street lamp erected at the corner turning off the village sidewalk to the station, the dark nights are coming and a lamp is very much needed, while it would not cost much it would be a great convenience and the Railway Co. will supply oil and attend to it, this we think very fair on the part of the company and we sincerely hope our trustees will have the lamp erected.

STELLA;
OR, AT CROSS PURPOSES.

CHAPTER II.—(CONTINUED.)

SUSETTE MARTON.

Stella tried to drag away her hand from under his arm. She was getting frightened at the results of her escapade.

"Please let me go, monsieur. I am going away—it is late; I am not going to stop any longer."

"Nonsense, you silly little thing; I am not going to let you go. I shall take you home myself. Tell me where you live."

They stood alone at the corner of the landing at the foot of the stairs. Norman had caught hold of both her hands, and stood holding her tightly.

Stella turned red and white alternately. Oh! what a dreadful position she had brought herself to by her own folly. To be held like this against her will, by a strange young man she had never seen before; to be made love to; to be asked where she lived, and told she would be taken home by him, as if she were a common shop-girl of the town? Oh! what a terrible shameful situation for Miss King to be placed in!

"Monsieur," she said, in a low voice, and ceasing to struggle, for she found it was useless, he held her in a grasp of iron; "monsieur, I must entreat you to let me go. It is late, and I am obliged to go away; let me go, I implore you."

"Not till you have paid toll, you little witch," cried Norman, speaking in English in his excitement.

She did not understand him; but she struggled once more to free herself, and managed somehow to get up two or three steps of the stairs, and then, suddenly, before she knew well what was coming, he had caught her round the waist, and was showering down kisses—hot, mad kisses, such as her innocent little childish soul had never even dreamt of—all over her lips, and eyes, and hot, burning cheeks.

"There, and there, and there!" he cried. "Now you may go as much as you like, Mademoiselle Susette Marton."

"How dare you—how dare you!" cried Stella, to his amazement, in very perfect English. "I wish I could kill you, you wicked man!"

And then she flies madly up the stairs; and Mr. Norman Allingham stands looking after her with a vague sense of having made an awful and terrible mistake.

He goes back into the dancing-room, thinking that in time she will come down again, and that he will apologize to her; for it does not occur to him that she lives in the house, only that she ran up-stairs to escape him.

But though he stands near the open doorway watching for her for a long time, the pretty Swiss girl appears to him no more that night.

CHAPTER III.

GRANDPAPA'S WISHES.

"Tell Miss Stella I want to speak to her."

Mrs. King is sitting with a number of open letters before her the following morning. She is severely dressed in heavy crape, and wears a widow's cap of an awful and uncompromising nature. She has very marked features, and glittering steel-gray eyes. She is the sort of woman one feels instinctively will get her own way in life.

The little French bonne is clearing away the cloth after the mid-day dejeuner, which the widow and her family have adopted, together with many other customs of the land they live in.

In an inner room Stella and Cecily are stooping over their lesson-books together, at a table in the window, preparing their history for the day's classes at the college.

There is a good deal of whispering going on between the two that has very little to do with the wars of Charlemagne, which is the ostensible subject of these young ladies' studies.

"Do you mean to say he kissed you?" whispers Cecily.

"Oh! Cecily, promise me you will never tell," replies her sister, crimson with the magnitude of her confession.

"Do you mean to say you didn't like it?"

"Oh! Cecily, it was awful!"

"Well," doubtfully, "I rather think I should not have minded much. He is so handsome."

"How can you say such a dreadful thing? If you were older you would understand. Fancy being held against one's will, and kissed and hugged like a common girl! Oh! I think I shall die of the shame of it!"

"Well, it was partly your own fault, Stella. Of course, if you dressed up like those other girls, and called yourself Susette Marton, you brought it upon yourself."

"Yes, that is the worst of it," agrees Stella, humbly, with a deep sigh. "It is chiefly my own fault; but oh! how I hope I shall never, never see that dreadful young man again. I should sink into the earth with humiliation!"

"Cheer up, Stella!" says Cecily, with a grin. "It might have been worse. It might have been Gaston, the waiter from the Inn, or Pierre, the porter's son from next door, who wears a beard and smells of smoke, who kissed you! That would have been far worse."

Miss King seemed scarcely amenable to consolation from these cheering suggestions. She sighed again; and then came a message from the next room that her mother wanted her.

Poor Stella obeyed trembling. She went into her mother's presence white with terror.

Was it possible that her last night's escapade had come to Mrs. King's ears, and that she was about to be scolded for it?

"Shut the door, Stella; I have something important to say to you."

Yes, it must be that. Stella shut the door, and shivered.

Mrs. King took an open letter from the writing-table before her.

"My dear Stella, you are no longer a child. You are seventeen and a half, and it is time that I should speak seriously to you."

"Yes, mamma."

"I wish to tell you something about your grandfather, from whom I had a letter a few days ago."

Stella breathed more freely. Her grandfather could have no possible connection with the procession of Swiss peasants at Madame Halevy's fancy dance.

"You have never seen your grandfather, Stella, and I dare say you have often wondered why; the fact is, he very much disapproved of your father's marriage. I was poor, and my people were not aristocratically connected. Old Mr. King had other views for his only son, and when your poor dear father insisted on marrying me, he was very angry indeed, and told him he would disinherit him and never see his face again. The only other child was a daughter; she, on the contrary, married very well and quite according to her parents' wishes. She had one son, whom Mr. King instantly made his heir, and during the whole of your father's life he continued inexorable towards him. But now both son and daughter are dead and Mr. King is growing old, I suppose he is sorry for having been so hard and unforgiving; for some weeks ago he wrote to me and proposed to me a plan for our advantage, that is to say, for you and Cecily. I said nothing about it then, but now the time is come when I must tell you. Mr. King, of course, having brought up his grandson as his heir, must leave the house and property, which is a very nice one, to him; but he has besides that a considerable fortune, of which he generously purposes to leave two-thirds to one of my daughters, and one-third to the other, on condition that one of you consent to marry his grandson, your cousin."

"Mamma!" Up to this point Miss Stella had paid but very little attention to her mamma's description of old family feuds and quarrels that had happened before she was born. She was looking out of the window and trying to count the pigeons that were whirling round and round the gray Cathedral towers that stood up tall and venerable over the crowd of pointed red roofs that clustered at their feet. What did she care about old Mr. King and his affairs? he was nothing to her; she only felt rather bored, and wished she might go back to Cecily and talk over last night to her again. But at her mother's last words she started, and opened her blue eyes to their very widest; she was all attention now. "Marry him, mamma!"

"Yes, the one of you who marries him will have the largest share of the fortune: of course should you neither of you do so, it is doubtful what he will do with his money, though he says he will provide for you in any case; but he would probably leave you only a comparatively small sum; however, we need not talk of that, because of course you will be good girls and do as you are told. You, as the eldest, are the one who will have the first chance; of course Cecily is a mere child."

"But, mamma, how can I marry a man I have never seen?"

"My dear, that difficulty is easily overcome; your cousin arrived at Valency yesterday, and I have just had a note from him to say he will call immediately, and that is why I am telling you about it, that you may receive him, when he comes, with modesty of course, as befits your sex and years, but also graciously and pleasantly, remembering that he is the person whom your friends have destined to be your husband."

Stella's face was a study. There was a pretty flush upon her cheeks, and she looked down and twisted her fingers in and out of the crape folds of her dress, with a little smile upon her lips. After all it was a fine thing to be considered grown-up and be told that she was to have a lover. She was not at all averse to the notion. She thought how Marie and Josephine and Clare at the classes, who were always wishing they had lovers, would envy her, and, above all, what Cecily would say of it.

She thought it would be delightful to tell them all about it, and that some day she would be married, and have a fine trousseau from Paris like the Perfect's daughter had last summer. But I don't think she thought a bit about the unknown cousin who was coming to see her.

"Make haste and clear away the breakfast things," said Mrs. King to the maid. "There is a gentleman coming to see me this morning."

The little family lived entirely in this front room, which was large and airy, with three windows looking on to the Cathedral Square. In the smaller room at the back, the girls learnt their lessons, and the maid sat at her needle-work. The breakfast things having been removed, the table was pushed up into a corner, and another smaller one, carrying books and photographs, took its place. Mrs. King brought out a great china bowl full of flowers and placed it in the centre. In a few minutes the room looked habitable and pretty, like the abode of a lady.

"It is time for us to go to the College," said Stella, who watched her mother's operations without offering to help her.

"I wish you to stay at home this morning; tell Cecily to put on her hat and go without you."

This edict imparted a solemnity to the proceedings which rather frightened Stella; she began to have a vague feeling of nervousness concerning the expected visitor.

Cecily, unenlightened, but wondering, was sent off by herself. She was only able to whisper a word to her sister.

"Is it about last night? Are you in a scrape?"

"No; it has nothing to do with it," whispered Stella back. "I will tell you when you come home."

Cecily was excessively puzzled; but being deprived of her sister's companionship she consoled herself by spending four sous in barley-sugar sticks, from the old woman who kept an open-air stall at the corner of the Cathedral Square. At sixteen consolations are easily to be found.

Meanwhile Stella wandered restlessly about from one window to the other.

"Cannot you get your fancy-work and sit still?" said her mother, and anybody might almost have imagined that austere lady to be possessed herself with a spirit of nervousness and disquiet, for her letter progressed but slowly under her pen.

"You know I hate fancy-work, mamma."

"Nevertheless, Stella, I think it would look better, more self-contained, more ladylike, if you were to take your work in your hands. I should like your cousin to be well impressed by you, and to think that you were womanly and well brought up."

"My cousin must take me as he finds me," answers Stella, with a little toss of her head.

Mrs. King looked displeased, and a little bit puzzled. "I think, perhaps, my dear, that it will be better for you to go to your own room now, as I may wish to say a few words to your cousin alone. When I want you I will come and find you."

"Very well, mamma, as you like," answered Stella, carelessly. "It will certainly be pleasanter than sitting by with my fancy-work. By the way, what is his name, for you have not told me that yet? And how old is he?"

"His name is Norman Allingham, and he must be, I should think, about four-and-twenty. Hush! I hear some one coming upstairs. I think you had better go to your room now."

Stella made her escape to the bedroom, which she and Cecily shared together, which was on the same storey, but along the narrow passage that led to the back of the house. No sooner had she reached it in safety than she heard a ring at the door of the little vestibule, and the tread of a man's footstep being ushered in.

He must have come now. She leant against the window-frame, and looked idly out, waiting for her mother's summons. There were no Cathedral towers to be seen from this side of the house, and no whirling flocks of pigeons to be counted. There was nothing amusing at all to be looked at, only a great many gray and red roofs, and a countless number of chimney pots. There was a long row of linen fluttering in the wind upon some leads, and a great deal of shouting and crying from the portiere's dirty, little children in the court-yard next door, which, however, was too far below to be seen.

All this soon ceased to interest Stella. What a very long time her mother was in sending for her; and what on earth could they be talking about all this time? Was it her own virtues, moral and physical, that were being discussed? or was the unknown cousin bargaining for a fair choice between herself and Cecily? It was all rather irritating, of course; but then Stella did not feel about such discussions as most English girls would have done. She had seen so much of these marriages, which were all settled beforehand between the parents on both sides, since she had been in France, that it did not strike her as anything at all extraordinary that her fate should be ordered for her in the same manner.

When a French girl was old enough, then her relations began to look about for a parti, and, when he was found, the young people were brought together, and nine out of ten girls did what their parents wished with perfect docility, became the wives of the men whom they were told to marry, and were perfectly happy and contented ever after.

There was nothing at all astonishing to Stella in this method of procedure. Only she did wonder what kept her mother talking for so very long to this young man.

Ten, twenty, thirty minutes went by, and Stella began to think that she was forgotten altogether, when all at once she heard her mother's step along the corridor, and Mrs. King came in.

"You must have thought I was never coming for you," she said. "The fact is your cousin has insisted upon seeing you for the first time alone. I do not think it is at all correct, and I don't think he should have asked for such a thing. But he was so urgent about it, that I have been obliged to yield. Go into the salon, my dear, and don't be nervous."

Stella went slowly along the passage. She wondered what he had got to say to her that he had positively insisted on seeing her alone.

She stood on the landing half a minute, holding the handle of the door irresolutely. At last she summoned up her courage, and went in.

A tall young man, with fair hair, turned round suddenly at her entrance.

It was the hero of her last night's adventure!

CHAPTER IV.

THE TEMPER OF A FURY.

Before ever he had come to the tall old house in the Cathedral Square that morning, Norman Allingham had made up his mind that he would, in the first place, ask for a private interview with the young cousin whom his grandfather rather peremptorily had desired him to marry. No doubt the marriage would be a very good arrangement if it could be brought about, for when Mr. King had unfolded his plans to him he had said to himself—"She will have all the money, and what on earth is the good of a place like Wrexham if one hasn't any money to keep it up?"

Wrexham was an enormous and insatiable monster, which devoured its own rents as fast as it made them, and without a large balance at one's banker's it would become an anomaly. A poor man owning it might just as well be a pauper at once; and, since Mr. King had determined to leave all his other property away to his son's daughter, Norman felt that the heirship of Wrexham was a boon which few men would think it necessary to be thankful for.

It was very hard on him, certainly, this whim of the old man's; but, as Mr. King had taken pains to explain to him, if he only would consent to do what he wished it need make no difference at all to his prospects. Norman had consented—grudgingly and unwillingly certainly, but still he had told his grandfather he would at all events go and see the unknown bride he had designed for him; and, knowing very well how important to his future his marriage would be, he had started on his journey with a fixed intention of wooing the young lady fairly and earnestly.

But since yesterday only Norman Allingham's heart had failed him. He said to himself that he was too young and too impressionable to take upon himself the responsibilities of matrimony; he had no desire to bind himself up for a life to a woman. Why, the first pretty girl he had met in France had been sufficient to set his blood on fire, and to haunt his dreams. What sort of a husband, then, would he be likely to make to a poor girl who placed her trust in him?

Norman told himself that he was not going to marry a girl from motives of pecuniary advantage, and then behave like a villain to her; and yet he felt himself to be too capricious and too inconstant to make a good husband to his cousin.

So he came to the determination that before he said anything else to her, he would tell her this plainly and fairly. If she chose, after what he said, to run the risk of marrying him, well and good; if not, then better freedom and poverty than domestic misery and wealth.

These things could be spoken to the daughter, but hardly to the mother. Mr. Allingham did not tell Mrs. King what he wanted to see her daughter alone for, only he insisted upon the interview with so much pertinacity that she was at length obliged to consent to his wishes.

She went out of the room, and Norman waited, and, whilst he waited, he said to himself that, if only he could honorably and fairly get rid of this burden of unwilling love-making that was on his conscience, he would then turn his attention towards hunting up that lovely French girl he had danced with last night; he did not quite know what he meant to do if he found her, but, probably, he would kiss her again.

He had just settled this satisfactorily in his own mind, when the door opened behind him.

Turning hurriedly round, he beheld a young girl dressed in sombre black—a girl with a golden head and large blue eyes. There was no short blue skirt and white bodice, no silver chains about her neck, nor velvet head-dress on her shining locks; but for all that he knew her at once—it was the girl whom he had danced with last night.

They stood still, and looked at each other in mutual astonishment.

All that came into Norman's head was that she was some protegee of his aunt's—some girl of the place whom she had hired to wait upon herself or her daughters. What bad luck it was to find her here of all places on earth!

As to Stella, she stood breathless and defiant, looking at him with wide-open eyes full of anger and indignation. At the first sight of him she had turned crimson all over her fair young face.

Norman made a half-timid step towards her, keeping one eye nervously fixed on the door, that might at any moment re-open to admit the cousin he was awaiting.

"Susette!"

"So it is you, then, who are my cousin," was the reply, in very good English, in a voice ringing with scorn and contempt.

"Your cousin! What do you mean? Ah! is it possible that I can have made such a mistake? That you are—— No, it cannot be! Where, then, is Susette Marton?"

"She is ill in bed. I am Stella King."

Norman burst out laughing.

"What a capital joke! You dressed up, I suppose, for a bit of fun. Now I see it all. Fancy my being so completely taken in! Ha! ha!"

But Stella did not join in the laughter. She only stood looking at him coldly and contemptuously.

He became a little uneasy under that fixed glance of displeasure.

"Come, my pretty cousin, let us shake hands and make friends. I really think I am a very lucky fellow to have danced with you without knowing it. Shake hands, won't you?"

He held out his hand, but Stella clasped hers resolutely together behind her back.

Norman began to be dimly aware that his wooing was not about to prosper.

"I have something to say to you, Mr. Allingham," she said.

The young man looked rather crestfallen.

"You can say what you like; but you need not look at me as if you detested me," he began.

Stella cut short the reproaches that he was about to utter.

"You did me the honor last night, when I so unexpectedly had the pleasure of dancing with you, of taking me into your confidence. You told me that you had come to Valency upon a dreadful business—to find a wife whom your grandfather had arranged for you to marry, whether you liked her or no. You also told me that the subject was disagreeable to you even to speak about, and that this young lady was certain to be hateful to you."

"But, my dear cousin, of course, I did not know. I never intended——"

"I beg your pardon; I am quoting your own words."

"But can you suppose——"

"I suppose nothing. I only remember what you were good enough to confide to me on the subject. And this being exactly what you told me, I am sure it will be a great relief to you to hear me say that, under no circumstances whatever, will I ever consent to marry you."

"Stella!"

"It is quite as well to be frank, is it not?" said Stella, with a little break in her voice, her stock of courage being well nigh exhausted.

"But pray think how unjust you are," cried Norman, whose vanity was up in arms at so prompt a dismissal, and who began to think his cousin Stella, in her black dress, even more bewitchingly lovely than "Susette Marton," the Swiss peasant. "I should never have said such to you had I not admired you intensely. Stella, you must have seen that at the very first sight of you I fell hopelessly in love with you."

"I know nothing about love," said Stella, lowering her eyes for one minute; "but," drawing herself up proudly, "this I do know, that the man who insults a stranger because he believes her to be friendless and in an inferior rank of life, is not the man whom I can ever regard with anything but aversion and dislike."

"Insult you! Good gracious! Miss King, what can you mean?" cried Norman, distracted. "Why, I had sooner cut my hand off than insult any woman, and you above all other women! What on earth do you mean?"

"How can you dare to deny it!" cried Stella, angrily. "Do you not recollect, then, what happened?—what you did?—what—what ——"

She stopped short, stammering, and covered with confusion.

"Ah! that unlucky kiss!" said Norman; and, unfortunately for him, he smiled.

That smile definitely turned the scales against him. Stella could have danced with passion.

"Yes," she repeated, furiously, "that unlucky kiss, as you call it. And if you think it was a kind or gentleman-like action to seize a girl against her will, and to dare to kiss her, I am sorry that I do not agree with you. You grossly insulted me, not knowing who I was; and when I remember it, ah! I could sink into the earth with humiliation and shame! I will never forgive you!"

How to Use Water Lime Cement.

When water lime is fresh and good no other should be used for any purpose, sets so rapidly when mixed with water there is not sufficient time to add the sand required and thoroughly intermingle it with the mortar. The water lime and sand are therefore mixed dry in a thorough manner. Two barrels of clean sharp sand to one barrel of Rosendale (American) cement is the proportion when permanent work to resist water is to be made. The sand and cement (hydraulic water lime is called cement in common usage) are mixed as follows: One barrel of sand is thrown in a heap, like a pile upon a floor of plank; a barrel of cement is thrown over this, and lastly the third barrel of sand is spread over the heap. The whole is then shovelled over and well mixed together, so that every particle of sand and cement may be in contact with some of the finely pulverized cement. A sufficient quantity of the sand and cement is then separated from the rest and formed into a hollow, basin-shaped heap. Water is poured into this, and the mixture well mixed with a hoe until it becomes a semi-fluid mortar. It is then ready for use. As it will set in a few minutes it should be used at once, and no more should be mixed at one time than can be used in five minutes. Seven to ten pailfuls of water are needed to mix the three barrels of sand and cement, and the batch will make nearly ten cubic feet in bulk. When a greater quantity of cement is to be used the proportions may be measured from the heap near the mixing to a barrel without heads which is placed on the milking boards; the barrel is then filled and rolled around and the sand emptied out in a convenient heap. The barrel of cement is then opened and emptied upon the sand, and the next barrel of sand is measured for the first was.

If the stoneware pipe is to be laid in cement joints care must be taken to bed the joint well into cement placed below it, for if the pipe will leak there; and if the cement is not solid it will settle and displace the pipe. This point should be carefully observed in laying drains or sewers through filled ground or about the foundations of houses.

For making concrete for cellar or stable floors, or for walls of buildings, the mortar is prepared as above described, and to each three barrels of mortar so made ten barrels of sharp angular broken stone should be mixed. The stone should be well wetted thoroughly before it is added to the mortar. The stone may be measured in barrels as described for the sand, and a bucketful of water may be thrown over the stone before it is turned out of the barrel. The mortar, when mixed, is left in a mass 6 feet long, 5 feet wide, and three inches thick, the wetted stone is shovelled evenly over this, and the whole is turned quickly with shovels until the fragments of stone are well coated with the mortar. When the concrete is put in place it should be well rammed until the stone is covered with a semi-fluid mortar; when it will be compact without air spaces in the mass, for what we know as "honeycombed." In work of good plan is for two men to turn the mass over, one at each end, by putting the shovels under the mortar and stone and turning them outwards; in time the men meet at the centre, and there are two heaps. Then the process is reversed, and the heaps are mixed again. It will then be well mixed, and each shovelful is turned, the back of the shovel should be drawn with a spreading motion over it; the mass is thus more thoroughly mixed and incorporated together, and it is obvious that the more intimate the mixture the more closely the stone will be packed and the stronger will be the concrete.

Four mixers should prepare a batch, as above described, or of 8 barrels, in all, equal to 28 cubic feet, in ten minutes, if the men are used to the work; otherwise twice the time will be occupied. It is important to note this fact, because no more should be prepared in a batch than can be finished in ten minutes, and used in ten minutes more. Thus the mixed batch is being used as much as should be preparing. The quantity of water used for the proper mixing, of course, varies when the sand is moist and the stone washed and wet, should not be more than 24 cubic feet, or 24 gallons (8 pailsful), if the sand is dry one-fourth more water is used.

The cost of making the concrete will be about $1.50 per cubic yard, if forty cubic yards a day are made, allowing $1 as the price of the cement, 50 cents a yard for sand, and 50 cents a yard for the broken stone, more or less larger than a goose egg.—Country Gentleman.

A Train's Race with a Tornado.

From Mr. R. Schermehorn, Pullman conductor between this point and Kansas City, we glean the following account of a tornado he witnessed on the Kansas road. He said the afternoon had been intensely sultry and hot, and as the train bowled along he noticed heavy black clouds gathering in the north. They grew blacker and more dense and rolled up in enormous proportions, obscuring the sun. It grew dark very rapidly, while along the edges of the cloud the lightning played a fantastic dance. The cloud hung lower and lower until it seemed to almost touch the ground.

Suddenly a murmur, which increased to a roar was heard, and at a distance on the prairie could be seen the destroyer as it came. Mr. Schermerhorn says it was not a funnel-shaped, but as it was not funnel-shaped, but had sucked up everthing in its path as it came. were feathers. THE STORY OF A FAMOUS DIAMOND

How Gen. Melikov's Ancestor Had the Jewel from the Persians.

The following details of the origin of the famous jewel which adorns the Imperial sceptre of Russia were furnished me during a residence in St. Petersburg by a descendant of the Armenian merchant who brought the stone to Russia:

The diamond, in its rough state, formed the eye of an idol in a temple near Trichinopoli, and was abstracted by a French renegade, who escaped with his prise to Persia. Here he wandered from town to town, trying to dispose of it for a moderate sum, but only meeting with distrust and suspicion. At length, when the news of the theft had spread over India and reaching Persia, fearing arrest, he accepted the offer of a Hebrew merchant and surrendered the diamond for $10,000. Meantime the Shah was informed not only of the robbery, but also that the thief was residing in his territory, and had offered the stone repeatedly for sale.

At once his Highness gave orders to arrest the man, dead or alive, and to seise the diamond. The Jewish merchant naturally became alarmed for the safety of his new acquisition, as well as that of his head, and gladly sold the stone to an astute Armenian merchant named Shafras for $60,000. The magnificence of Catherine the Great and her court was a by-word in Armenia and Persia, and Shafras knew right well that if he could reach St. Petersburg with his diamond he would be able to dispose of it at a handsome profit. The greatest difficulty was to secrete the stone so thoroughly about his person that in case of his arrest it should not be discovered. It was to large for him to swallow, so he solved the problem by making a deep incision in the calf of his left leg, inserting the stone, and sewing up the wound with silver thread.

When the cut had cicitrized sufficiently to allow the removal of the wire, Shafras began his travels toward Russia. Had he known on arriving at the frontier that the diamond had been traced to the Jewish merchant, and from him to an Armenian, he would probably have tried to conceal his nationality. But he boldly proclaimed himself an Armenian merchant to the Shah's inquisitive officials, was arrested, and consigned to prison on suspicion. Strong emetics were dministered, but no diamond came to light He was stripped naked, plunged into an hot bath, and then examined from head to foot, with no better success. Even a little torture was tried, but Shafras was firm: and in the end he was bundled unceremoniously over the frontier—his petty cash, however, being retained. He reached Orenburg, and here some compatriots advanced him some money to reach the capital.

Catherine the Great was short of ready money when Shafras offered her his diamond for sale. He demanded $200,000 for it, but the Empress could not raise more than $100,000, and though she offered 40,000 dessiatins (at four acres each) of Crown land in addition to this sum, Shafras refused. Catherine was greatly chagrined, and did not hide her annoyance; but she was too noble a character to resort to the coercive measures which a Shah of Persia would have adopted without a moment's hesitation. Shafras was allowed to depart unmolested, and betook himself to Amsterdam to have his diamond cut. Here it was that the famous Count Orlov first saw the jewel for which his imperial mistress had sighed, and he determined to lay it as a gift at her feet. The bargain with Shafras was concluded offhand, for Count Orlov never haggled. In exchange for the diamond (which weighs 185 carats, and is valued at $1,500,000) Count Orlov promised Shafras, on his return to Russia, $250,000 down, an annuity of $2,000 and a patent of nobility.

The Count kept his word; Shafras the merchant became Lazarev the gentleman, cashed his bills at the imperial treasury, and drew $2,000 a year for the rest of his life, which, as usual with annuitants, was a very prolonged one. Before he died he became one of the richest men in Russia. With the price of the diamond he bought moinesn the Oural, land in Bessarabia, and houses in St. Petersburg. The "unearned in rement" in thirty years made him ten times a millionaire, and at the present day his descendants numbering hundreds, are all immensely rich. Loris Melikov, former Minister of the interior, and Delianov, at present Minister of Public Instruction, are grandchildreu of the Armenian Lazarev.

How Powder Men Were Fooled.

It is well known among those who have occasion to buy powder in large quantities that tremendous rivalry exist between the agents of the California blasting powders represented here. Each is in the estimation of its special representives more effective and cheaper than all the others, and agents are only too anxious to demonstrate this fact by experiments when there is a sale in prospect. Some time ago the military at Vancouver wanted to build a new road leading from the garrison, and a survey showed that fifty or sixty stumps would have to be removed. So one of the officers came over and mentioned to several powder agents in a semi-confidential way that the army would need some powder and that the quartermaster would not object to competitive tests. Six agents then asked for the privilege of making tests, and their request was granted. On the day appointed three thousand pounds of the best blasting powder came to Vancouver, charges were put in by experienced men engaged for that purpose by the agent, and in two hours every one of the stumps was scientifically removed. And the government didn't pay a cent.—Portland Oregonian.

The Church Needing all Kinds of Men.

The church needs poor men and wicked men as well as rich and virtuous men. Too much of one kind won't do. There must be a healthy circulation. It's a morally bursted community where the rich and wise are the cream and the mass of the population the skimmed milk. I've no objection to a creed as long as it is my own, and I don't care whether a church is Protestant or Catholic so long as it adheres to the principles of the Book. There ought to be an aristocracy of manliness and truth. The spirit of the Gospel is democratic. It raises the average of mankind. That's why democracy doesn't produce great men. The people themselves are great, but the men are not so individually great in this country nowadays.—H. W. Beecher.

Methodist Union.

The union of the Methodist churches of this country has at length become an assured fact so far as it can be made such by the action of the local church courts of the largest of these bodies. The basis has received the endorsation of nearly nine-tenths of the Quarterly meetings of the Methodist Church of Canada, and of five-sixths of the existing Annual Conferences. The conference which is to be organized in Manitoba early next month will, it is believed, vote pretty nearly solid for it, and in that case proportion in favor of it will be six-sevenths. This result, after all the efforts, fair and foul, which have been made by a certain class of "leading" ministers—from whom the public had a right to look for better things—must be highly satisfactory to the prosecutors of the measure.

The London Conference, or the ministers who composed it, had at least the courage of their convictions. The reason of their extraordinary and somewhat disappointing action is not quite apparent, but in the judgment of charity we must believe that they acted conscientiously. It is satisfactory, too, to know that appearances to the contrary notwithstanding, they are all, with two or three notable exceptions, staunch union men. Even those who have labored hardest to make the proposed union, or indeed any union other than simple absorption of the smaller bodies by the largest, an impossibility, resent the imputation that they are the opponents of union. Has their opposition after all been a huge joke? If one could be assured of this he could more readily understand the style and spirit of the discussion which took place at St. Catharines.

The debate on the Union question in Peterborough, if the reports which have reached us are trustworthy, was in striking contrast with that at St. Catharines. Mr. Bredin's dissection of Dr. Sutherland appears a little coarse as he is reported, but we are assured that the impression which one gets of it from what has appeared in the newspapers is scarcely correct. The other speeches were generally in good spirit and good taste. The speakers on both sides appeared to have got the impression that they were dealing with a grave question, involving issues in which great religious interests were involved, and that not only the eys of their own church but those also of the whole Christian world were upon them. Neither the Rev. Mr. Griffin's bad egg, nor the goose that laid it, would have found any appropriate place in the Peterborough debate.

Though we have never had any sympathy with the opposition to the proposed union of the Methodist Churches, he is not blind to the distinguished ability with which it has been conducted in the Toronto Conference. Under the able management, as it is understood, of the Rev. Dr. Dewart, it was as thoroughly organized as it well could be. The leader was specially fortunate in having for his chief lieutenants the Rev. Dr. Hunter and his gifted brother, the pastor of Sherbourne Street Church, to say nothing of such skilful and accomplished debaters as Dr. Jeffers and the Rev. Messrs. Bredin, and Briggs. These three names are a sufficient guarantee that nothing within the bounds of possibility was left undone in order to defeat the measure. Anything that can run the gauntlet of three such great guns and escape undamaged, may henceforth be considered safe.

But the opposition to the union in the Toronto Conference, as it appears to us, broke down under its own weight. If it had been as weakly manned as it was in the London Conference, its defeat might not have been so crushing. It was felt from the beginning at Peterborough that in view of the acknowledged ability of the men who were arrayed against it, if there was any real argument that could be produced in opposition to it, it would be forthcoming. But every successive speech which was made on that side, only made it more apparent that the argument was all with the unionists. Waverers who went to Conference with their minds undecided must have felt that if this is all that could be said against the measure, there was no other course left open to them but to vote for it.

An Elephant's Reasoning Powers.

An elephant belonging to an engineer officer had a disease in his eyes and had for three days been completely blind. His owner asked Dr. Webb, a physician, if he could do anything for the relief of the animal. Dr. Webb replied that he was willing to try on one of the eyes the effect of nitrate of silver, which was a remedy commonly used for similar diseases of the human eye. The animal was accordingly made to lie down and when the nitrate of silver was applied uttered a terrific roar at the acute pain which it occasioned. But the effect was wonderful, for the eye was in a great degree restored and the elephant could partially see. The doctor was in consequence ready to operate similarly on the other eye on the following day, and the animal when he was brought out and heard the doctor's voice, lay down of himself, placed his head quietly on one side, curled up his trunk, drew in his breath, like a human beaing about to endure a painful operation, gave a sigh of relief when it was over, and gave evident signs of wishing to express his gratitude. Here we plainly see in the elephant memory, understanding and reasoning from one thing to another.

The animal remembers the benefit that he had felt from the application to one eye, an when he was brought to the same place on the following day and heard the operators' voice he concluded that a like service was to be done to his other eye.

Happy Once More.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—A Chronicle reporter was told by Mr. Alfred J. Papin, of this city, that his nephew had the most obstinate case of inflammatory rheumatism which baffled all kinds of treatment until St. Jacobs Oil, the great pain-conqueror, was used. It cured the young man, and he recommends it as the greatest cure for pains in the world.

Here are some proverbs slightly perverted:—Hunger is the best sauce, hence street boys are naturally saucy. Many men have many minds, but one woman frequently has more than all of them. They who dance leave the host to pay the fiddler. What cannot be cured supports the doctors. Speak of the devil and he is sure to call for copy. A fair exchange would ruin the stock market. Fair play is a jewel, but bluff takes the pile.

FOR THE

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—whoever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

THE BOLT AND IRON CO.

LATE DOMINION BOLT CO.

We predict a high premium for the stock of The Bolt and Iron Co. They are moving into their new works, which cover about an acre of ground, all the men and machinery on the ground floor, so arranged that the best results will be had at the smallest cost. They pay a ten per cent. dividend this year, they will do better next; they carry a large amount over, after payment of dividend, to the credit of profit and loss and will continue to accumulate a large surplus each year from the sales of their lands besides their profits in manufacturing; the business is profitable now and constantly increasing. They withdrew the stock from the market at the beginning of the year. They are now about to offer the unallotted stock to pay for improvements. This affords an opportunity to investors that they cannot often have, an opportunity to become interested in a proved valuable and established business, manufacturing goods that are as stable as the iron from which they are manufactured. The time will come when the stock may be considered cheap at $200, now the limited amount of unallotted stock may be had at par to those who are first to secure it. No fires can destroy their premises they are fireproof, their locality is increasing in value, and other projected factories seek location on the surplus land belongin to the Company which will help to multiply its value.

The Indian Government has decided to grant the Ameer of Afghanistan a large annual subsidy.

Highly Satisfactory.

Impure blood and low vitality are the great sources of most diseases for which Burdock Blood Bitters is the specific. S. Perrin, Druggist, of Lindsay, writes that Burdock Blood Bitters give more general satisfaction than any blood purifier in the market. (25)

It is calculated that all the French troops on the way to Tonquin will have arrived by the middle of the month.

THE GOOD OF FALLOWING.

Nearly all the good of fallowing is obtained by a green crop that is either plowed under or fed to live, stock, and the manure returned to the land. A soil gains in its stock of available plant food by growing crops, if none of the soil elements are removed. Pasturage is one of the best methods of recruiting land. Potash and phosphoric acid are brought up from the lower soil by the roots, and finally deposited either on the surface or in the turf. In like manner, the nitric acid that might have escaped in the drainage water, is captured by the roots, and changed into a fixed form in organic compounds. A quicker method of renewing the strength of a feeble soil is to grow some scavenger plant, like buckwheat, and plow under the whole crop, thus adding organic matter rapidly to the surface soil. This may be followed by clover, a plant that has a special renovating power, and by growing throughout the whole season is one of the best means of gathering and holding fertility. The fallow is valuable, but in most cases a growing crop does a larger and more lasting work of restoration.—DR. B. D. HALSTED, in American Agriculturist for June

EARS FOR THE MILLION

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restores the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as CARCHARODON RONDELETII. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.

I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.

I have been greatly benefited.

My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—EDITOR OF MERCANTILE REVIEW.

Osprey.

From a correspondent.

The Council met at McIntyre, on Saturday 14th, when the Minutes of Council for 82 together with Auditors' Report were delivered in pamphlet form by the Flesherton printer, we were informed it took him four months to print them. The Voters' List for 1883 was also delivered by the Markdale printer and both were destributed to ratepayers.

Business is very quiet at McIntyre even on Council day, McLeau keeps a very respecable and orderly hotel while the two stores McFarlane and Kegan, are doing a very fair business.

Stinson & Co., of Maxwell, are preparing to move into the premises recently purchased by W. L. B. Hamlin. Mr. Hamlin purposes removing out of the place shortly, so that the insinuation in the STANDARD last week to the effect that he had some interest in a proposed opposition to Stinson was incorrect.

Mr. Kertun's selling out to Osburn, has fallen through, and the former continues the business.

Mr. Shaw, the new Methodist minister, has arrived with his family.

A meeting of Directors of our Agricultural Society will be held in Singhampton shortly to decide where and when the Fall Show will be held this season, it will likely be in Singhampton or McIntyre.

Mr. Josiah Gamey returned last week from the North West whither he went the first of June. He has three sons and a daughter living up their. Mr. Gamey thinks it will in time be a grand country, but present appearances are not sufficiently encouraging to make it advisable for those who have a comfortably home in Osprey to pull up stakes and remove there.

Meaford Road.

Several of our boys were out at the camp at Niagara, they say they had a good time.

The Annual Sabbath School pic-nic, came off on the 4th inst., the attendance was not as large as on former occasions.

Some few have started to cut their hay, the weather at present is not the most favourable for hay making.

This is a good year for grass, consequently there is lots of milk going to the Flesherton Cheese Factory.

Mr. A. Elliott, was in this neighborhood on the 10th, letting road jobs.

Our pathmaster, Mr. J. Freman, has got his statute labour performed for this year. some parties are not satisfied with the part of the beat that he thought best to improve.

Mr. R. Smith, Jr., is building a new house, sensible Richard, make the cage first and then catch the bird.

Mr. R. Shaw is preparing to erect a large frame barn.

Flesherton.

A large crowd here on the 12th and good order. A heavy rain came on in the afternoon, washing away W. H. Flesher's dam, causing a bad wash-out in the road opposite.

Mr. John Whitten had two of his fingers fingers smashed at a raising, one of which had to be amputated.

A man at Hogg's mill had his collar bone broken recently.

M. P. McMaster, head teacher, has been spending a few weeks in Toronto and returned Tuesday.

The stonework of the Presbyterian church is finished, and the brickwork will be pushed forward with all possible speed.

The foundation of Richardson's fine brick store is complete and is a fine job.

Chatsworth.

From a correspondent.

Mr. Jas. Duffy has bought the hardware business from J. Binns.

Duffy has sold his blacksmithing business and shops to Jas. McArthur.

Mr. Binns leaves in about two weeks for Oshawa.

The cattle fair Monday was largely attended and a good number of cattle changed hands.

Goode is building a new gangway up to his elevator.

Mr. Freeman has built a neat cottage which will be complete this season.

J. W. Elliott is preparing to build on his lot opposite Campbell's hotel.

Mr. Perry, the new Methodist minister, has arrived with his family. Mr. Lake has removed to Durham.

FLOODS IN THE WEST.

Appalling Disaster at London—Destructive Rising of the River Thames—Calamitous Loss of Life and Property.

A fierce thunderstorm raged at London Tuesday last, which continued until 2.30 next morning. At this hour people who were on the watch became uneasy, as the water in the river Thames began to rise rapidly, and in less than one hour it had risen fully five feet. The inhabitants of London West were now aroused, and as the water in the north branch of the river came thundering down appeared to seize hold of them, and much time was lost before systematic relief corps were organized. The scene from Blackfriars bridge baffles description. Looking across the river, what a few hours before were the tidy streets of London West is now nothing but a vast sheet of water, relieved here and there by the roof of a house or the top of a tree. The view from the top of the Court House is that of a lake a mile across in each direction in which stand dozens of trees and houses. The branches of the trees hang in the yellow water and the roofs of the houses and upper part of their walls show above it. The surface of the lake is strewn with boards, timbers, and debris of all kinds. The whole of Kensington makes part of the lake. No sign of life is visible in the doomed village, except the men in

TERROR AND DISMAY

ROW BOATS PASSING FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE.

The houses which are left standing are half submerged, while several stand in the middle of the stream, where they floated and stranded in the early morning.

In many instances families were roused from their slumbers too late to reach dry land, and took refuge on the top of their cottages. On the hill top to the west many have sought safety from the raging torrents. Blackfriars street, which has heretofore been secure from floods, was from three to four feet under water, and the current that rushed down the cross streets was something terrific.

A number of persons have been drowned, and an immense amount of property destroyed. Dan Collins, who barely escaped with his life, lost almost everything he had in the world. His ice houses, containing over five thousand tons of ice, went down with the flood, as did his horses, waggons, barn, and stables. He estimates his loss at $10,000. Mrs. J. W. Reeves, of London West, who narrowly escaped with her children, had been aroused as the water was just about carrying off her house. Her husband was absent. Placing one child on her back, one under each arm, and with the fourth clinging to her dress, she made her way through the surging waters and reached the bank as her house was carried off and smashed to pieces by the bridge before her eyes.

"I SAVED THE CHILDREN"

was her simple statement. In the next house to Mrs. Reeve's, lived Mr. Onn, an Englishman, not long out, and here all were rescued save one little girl, whose tiny hand was seen above the surface of the river as the house was carried away.

The iron bridge at Oxford street, near the brewery, which cost $13,000, was wrecked early in the day. A couple of employees at the brewery named Kirkpatrick and Ludwig had a narrow escape from drowning while working heroically to save some children.

At Winnett's Flats, just over Clarke's Bridge, the destruction was most complete. Every house on Bridge street is full of water. Mr. Samuel Burt loses a house and barn; Mr. Stephen Merritt's house and barn toppled over; the old Holmes' homestead was swept away, and Joseph Hackett and Charles Cole both lose their homes. Mr. James Spackman, of London West, was warned of the danger, but thinking that the water would not rise any higher remained in his house. In a few minutes, however, the house swayed from side to side and broke loose from its fastenings. He made a dash for the window, but too late. One wild shriek burst forth on the morning air and the household were HURRIED TO THEIR DOOM.

The family consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Spackman and a little boy of some three years of age.

Among the many rescued was a Mr. Hopkins, of Kensington, London West. He first handed his wife into the boat, and then essayed to jump in himself. "Hold off, man," roared the boatman, Park, "the boat won't carry us all; we'll come back for you in a moment." But the man, overcome with terror, jumped into the frail skiff, which instantly upset, hurling the boatman, the woman, and the man into the river. Park and Hopkins clung to the boat, but the poor wife was swept away to her doom.

Perhaps the greatest sufferers by the flood are the family of Mr. J. F. Lacey, a trustee of the London West School. Three of them were drowned and four escaped. Mr. Lacey's nephew says:—"It was about 3 o'clock when we first noticed the water beginning to rise, but didn't think it dangerous until half an hour later. Then a house near by and we thought ours would go too. We then decided to make for high land. The water in the street was four feet deep, with a very swift current. Mr. Lacey himself went first and his daughter May, then I took Annie, and next came Flora, aged eleven, Frances, aged seven, Harry, ten, and Fred, twenty-two. The last four were all carried away. The first to go was one of the girls. She went back of the others. They stood the shock for a moment, and then one after another they gave out. Fred was the last. Mr. Lacey and I got to safe ground with Mary and Annie with great difficulty, hanging on to posts and fences as best we could. I tell you it was something terrible." Frances was picked up by a raft in the afternoon and conveyed to the bereaved parents. Miss Wright, who lived next Kensington Bridge and whose house was the first carried away, was rescued by Mr. P. Delaney who lives near the Cove. It is said that the fright she received has turned her into a raving maniac.

One of the saddest incidents connected with the disaster occurred on Paul street. A poor woman was confined the previous night, and early in the morning the infant died and the mother had to be borne to the school-house, which, owing to its high situation, offered an available retreat. Here kind friends did all that was possible under the unfortunate circumstances for the afflicted woman.

Among the narrow escapes may be mentioned that of Miss Wright. The tide had almost reached its height and several London West houses were floating out on the river. All the inmates had been warned and all had escaped except one young lady, Miss Wright, who persisted in remaining within doors. The house, as it steadied itself in the flood,

KEPT ITS UPRIGHT POSITION.

Miss Wright did not scream nor did she appear to have lost her presence of mind. As the strange vessel passed Dundas street Mr. McLean, standing on the walk, exclaimed: "Gracious heavens, there's a woman in that house and she has a lamp in her hand," and such appeared to be the case. Miss Wright was seen opposite one of the windows with a lighted lamp. "Nothing can save her," exclaimed another: but fortunately in her case the house drifted in to the shore near Reeve Bartram's, and Miss Wright was rescued from her perilous position.

The damage done to property will reach fully $500,000, while the loss of life cannot at present be estimated. The pumping-house at Springbank fell in the afternoon with a crash, but as there is steam power to attach, this will have no effect on the city's water supply. The people who suffered most are of the working class, and in some cases everthing they possessed was swept away. The Great Western division of the Grand Trunk railway is altogether blocked with the exception of the London and Port Stanley railway.

TWO SPANS OF THE WAUBUNO BRIDGE

about twelve miles east of the city are washed away, and this together with the condition of the bridges west of the city renders traffic on the main line impossible. There is also a washout at Thorndale, on the St. Mary's branch. An immense pile of debris is piled against the cove and Victoria bridges and a house is lodged against the latter.

The city has been in darkness owing to the submerging of the Gas Works. The hotels and printing offices have been lit with coal oil lamps and tallow dips.

At a meeting of citizens $715 was subscribed for the relief of the sufferers by the flood, and committees were appointed to solicit additional subscriptions. Up to midnight over 100 persons reported at the Central police station, and were billetted at the different hotels. The water is now falling as rapidly as it rose, and the worst of the disaster is believed to have passed.

The loss of life, so far as known, is as follows:—Mrs. Hopkins, Kensington; three children of Mr. R. F. Lacey, London West; a woman unknown; a seven-year-old girl of Mr. Ohn, Ann street; Mrs. Hutchinson; Mrs. Constance; three children of George Stratfold, Napier street; three children of D. F. McLean, Blackfriars street; one child of Wm. Moyland, Ann street; Mr. James Spackman, wife, and three-year-old boy.

MODERN STEAMERS.

Is the Limit of Safety in Loading Them Reached?

The Nautical Magazine remarks that there is one thing that we know, or should have learned from the vast experience, perhaps, as gloomy and unsatisfactory as it has been rash—that the majority of "cargo steamers," as at present constructed and sent to sea, have already—long since—reached the limit of safety in loading; if, indeed, many of them have not got much beyond it. If this be not so, how are we to account for the great number of such vessels which annually disappear? There is, surely, unmistakable evidence to prove that something is wrong somewhere: for many of them are comparatively new ships. After two long centuries of experience of all kinds of ships, and over all seas, a vanished school of able and sagacious seamen laid it down that a good ship, fairly loaded and ably commanded, will live in any storm—excepting, perhaps, cyclones and hurricanes, and the accidents which they engender: she positively can not sink, but is as certain to ride over those great rolling mountains of seething water as a well built church is of standing on its foundation. It is a great mistake to suppose, as some ship-builders really do, that because a ship is big, no heavy seas will ever run on board; in consequence of this fallacy, they take all manner of liberties in designs and constructions. It is difficult to believe there are such opinions in such quarters, yet it is so, notwithstanding. There is, doubtless, less science imported into ship-building now than in former times, when iron for such work was a novelty, and when the worthy blacksmith, though occupying an indisputable position, played only second fiddle in the symphony; but the merest rivetter should understand that the long, low steamers, which are now turned out of our building-yards, are the wettest and, in too many cases, the most dangerous ships which ever put to sea. A great ocean wave, however high or fast it may run, will lift up bodily any small ship or boat, but not so some four hundred-footer; and, as a matter of course, if it can not lift, must run over some part of her. Allowing such a wave to run at thirty-five miles an hour, and a great part of its crest, say twenty-five tons of water, to overwhelm her decks, we have at once a force equal to the charge of a locomotive against everything in the shape of an obstruction to its course. Yet it is common to see such ships putting to sea with all kinds of trumpery and feeble fittings—such as obtained in high-sided ships of fifty years back—feeble, it should be said, in relation to the amount of freeboard or bad weather to be encountered, and afterward doleful accounts in the newspapers about "terrific weather and fearful damage."

The Paris, Lyons, and Mediterranean Railway Company is one of the greatest monopolies in the world. It gets all the traffic overland from the south through France. The local trade of Lyons and Marseilles is at its mercy. By a new bargain with the Government the company is to build 600 miles of railway for the State, and is to carry the new roads until they pay, after which it is to give up two-thirds of the total profits.

Among the pictures lately sold by the Marquis of Lansdowne to Mr. Mackey is the famous Rembrandt portrait purchased by the grandfather of its late owner, which has always been regarded as one of the choicest gems in the Bowood gallery. Complaint is made that before allowing it to go to America Lord Lansdowne had not given the refusal of it to the National Gallery.

APACHE, ZUNI AND RANGER.

The Strange Contrasts the Oldest American City Shows.

At an early day of the Santa Fe tertio-millennial celebration the crowd pressed forward into the street while the Mescaleros Apaches, three abreast, passed by. Their frames and muscles would have delighted an athlete—heavy, massive heads with strong, virile features set firmly on giant frames. Their brawny chests stood out almost straight from robust shoulders, and they came gliding along with a firm but noiseless step, making no dust in a street that a single gust of wind would have beclouded. Red and black pigment lay in broad strips across their copper-colored faces. The faces of nearly all of them were heavily reddened. A few had painted black and red patches on their cheeks, heightening the effect with a border of the contrasting colors. Their hats were but bands covered with white beads and plentifully plumed. The moguls of the tribe wore ear pendants of polished bone as long as a finger, with chains attached to them, on which ornaments were strung. Their dress was of tight-fitting buckskin, decorated with strips of fur and bright leather. They carried each a spear reaching above their heads.

Several children, who attend the Indian school at Albuquerque, chubby little fellows with gray suits and cadet caps, marched manfully behind the sinew of the tribe and in the immediate charge of a sunblacked patriarch with a bone tube from which he blew at frequent intervals a half dozen notes suggestive of the clarionet, but most unearthly.

The rear of the party was brought up by an ear-ringed white scout with a full cartridge belt exposed and the tribe's dwarf in the toggery of the giants and carrying besides a circular shield, with a painted centre like a bull's eye and a whitish sheepskin body. The dwarf's face was seamed with age as though he was brought along to show that other things besides Santa Fe might be old and little.

The Zuni Indians followed the Apaches in the general procession. It was a bitter dose for the Zunis to take, for the two tribes are not friendly, the Zunis frowning on the nomadic mountain life that has made the Apaches of giant frame but of brains that in years past have turned only to the hunt and war path. The physical contrast between the two tribes was striking, the Zunis, many of them stoop-shouldered and shuffling along in duck leggings and dark, tight-fitting shirts, but with no facial or other decorations, and their long, straggling hair falling to their sunken breasts and hollow backs. With them marched their young white leader, Lieut. Frank Cushing, in a neat gray suit and broad-brimmed straw hat and carrying at his side a leather pouch, the only mark, except his long hair, that singled him out as one of the tribe.

Behind the Zunis the dust rose from the tramping of Maj. Fountain's brown-skinned rangers, wearing straw hats whose brims a pair of long arms could hardly span, and with yellow facings on their blue shirts. Carbines were hung across their saddles and ugly-looking small weapons dangled from their belts. There was about their fashion of striding a horse a suggestion, of swagger and readiness for hot business—at short range. This was the crowd that organized to clean out the cattle thieves near the Mexican border, a task which they were splendidly successful in.

The exercises ended with the opening of the several buildings containing exhibits, after which the various organizations sought their quarters, the Zunis to bend over their industries that they have brought with them, and the Apache to stretch their huge limbs in the wigwams or bare their parched breasts to the mountain breeze, until the advancing day brought within the gates a caravan of roulette and spinning Jenny worthies, around whom the painted giants clustered wit much satisfaction.

The afternoon was signalized by the arrival of the Governor of San Juan Pueblos, accompanied by his squaw and papoose. They rode into town on a pair of burros, the squaw carrying the papoose on one arm and a whip for the donkey, of which she was not sparing, in the other hand. From the Governor's saddle hung two canvas bags of provisions. They were dressed in costume befitting their rank, the Governoress wearing a scarlet dress and ample hat of straw and the Governor's leggins being nearly covered by a white shirt that would have held two of him. This and a plug hat brushed the wrong way, put his dignity to a severe test, but he passed through the streets without a mishap and drove in at the exposition gates like a conqueror.—Santa Fe (N.M.) Correspondent Denver News.

A Lawn Tennis Player.

A stroll on Washington Heights revealed to a correspondent a fashionable girl fashionably playing lawn tennis. She had more than the average height of her sex, and was symmetrically perfect. Her figure was encased in what he supposed was a jersey bodice. At all events, the fabric was elastic, woven, and seamless. In his opinion there was no corset under it, else she could not possibly have been so supple, nor would every movement of the muscles below her shoulder blades have been visible. He does not like to think that she was consciously on exhibition, and that her poses and action were studiously careless, for she made too fine a picture to lack honesty. Women may like to know that her skirt was short, striped, and scant; that her stockings were black; that her shoes were alligator skin, cut low; and that, as to her hat, their fancy must construct it out of the bare assertion that it was big, and so eccentric in shape that no architect could give an idea of it on paper without at least a hundred cross-section views.

The Grimm brothers, the famous writers of German fairy lore, are to have a monument through popular subscription.

The life of Richard Belt, whose suit against the critic who accused him of putting out others' work as his own, is still before the London courts, and reads like a romance. There was a time when he carried messages to the House of Lords, and chiselled with a nail, out of a piece of rough stone, his first artistic effort. But there came a day when he worked on Charles Kingsley's bust in Windsor Castle, in the presence of the Queen, and at Chiselhurst, before the Empress, in the studio of the Prince Imperial.

THOMAS CRAIG, President.

The President then said: Gentlemen, I think you will find the statement very clear and concise; it shows the exact position of the bank. Our past due loans, secured, which were $41,000 last year, have been reduced to $25,676.20, and the past due loans, not secured, have been completely written off, though there may possibly be a return from that item. During the year the Directors of the bank considered it advantageous to dispose of two of the branches in Ontario—one at Aylmer and the other at Park Hill—both of which have been disposed of on satisfactory terms, the Park Hill branch to our agent there and the Aylmer branch to the Molson's Bank. The principal reason for disposing of the above named agencies is, that we found we could use our capital more advantageously at the head office. As the report refers to the loss of the services of our late President, Mr. M. H. Gault, M. P., I may say that we are very glad to see him here to-day in renewed health and vigor, and I have no doubt that, if he thought at the time that his health would be again restored, he would have remained on the Board. I have nothing further to add, gentlemen, and if anyone has any questions to ask, I shall be very happy to answer them. I beg to move, therefore, the adoption of the report of the Directors.

Mr. De Martigny—What interest do you pay on the mortgage of $50,000?

The President—Five and a half per cent.

Mr. G. B. Cramp—Is that a new mortgage?

The President—No; it is the continuation of the old Bailleur de Fond, or balance of the original purchase money, on which we were formerly paying 7 per cent., but which is now reduced to 5½ per cent.

Mr. Cramp—Perhaps you can explain the item of $17,000 reserved for interests on deposits. Why do you include that among the liabilities, if the interests on deposits is paid up?

The President—That amount was credited to reserve interest at the end of June, but since then it has been credited to the individual accounts.

Mr. Cramp—I see, also, that there is an increase of $5,000 in the bank premises.

The President—We have spent over $10,000 in the repairs of the building, in order to get an adequate revenue from it, only one-half of which was added to the building account, the balance being written off to profit and loss. Now the building is rented nearly altogether from top to bottom.

Mr. Cramp—The bank premises are yielding a fair revenue, are they not?

The President—Yes, eight per cent., counting the annual rental of the portion occupied by the bank at $8,000.

Mr. M. H. Gault—The premises could be rented to advantage without the vault of a large amount of money, which has been made, and thus are now returning a fine revenue.

The President—The estimate of the manager was $4,000, but taking it at $8,000 it yields nearly eight per cent., and many of the places are rented at a very cheap rate.

The motion to adopt the report was carried unanimously.

The President appointed Messrs. G. Cramp and F. Caverhill to act as scrutineers.

Mr. M. H. Gault moved,

That the thanks of the shareholders are due and are hereby tendered to the Directors for their services during the past year.

He said:—I have very great pleasure in moving this resolution, and I am very pleased indeed to see the very satisfactory report which has been presented by the Directors. It is one which will, I think, commend itself to every shareholder, and I am satisfied that the Bank can go on prosperously as I hope it will do. In tendering my nomination as President and as a Director of the Bank, I pledged myself, as far as I possibly could, to give it every assistance in my power. I regret very much that I was compelled to resign my official connection with the bank, but I felt at the time I was an incumbrance, and that it would be better to appoint some gentleman to the Board who could give more attention to the affairs of the bank than I could, and for the reason I resigned my position. I had great pleasure in recommending that my friend, Mr. Bulmer, should be elected on the Board. I am very glad, therefore, that he has accepted the position, and I am sure the shareholders will agree with me in this respect.

Mr. George W. Craig seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. E. K. Greene, in returning thanks on behalf of the Directors, said: We are always grateful for acknowledgements, especially at this time, and I think we have good cause so far as the success of the bank is concerned. We have no past due debts which are not secured: we have gone through the books of the bank, and have carefully analyzed the accounts and have written off every bad debt so far as known, so that, with the addition of $50,000 to the Rest and an additional amount added to the Contingent Fund we have every reason for congratulation, and I sincerely hope we shall be as successful this year as we have been in the past. Gentlemen, on behalf of myself and my co-Directors, I thank you for the resolution just passed.

Ald. Thomas Wilson moved—

That the thanks of the shareholders are due and are hereby tendered to the officers of the Bank, both at the head office and branches, for their faithful and efficient services during the past year.

He said:—It affords me great pleasure to move this resolution, and I can bear personal testimony of the uniformly polite attention on the part of the officers of the bank.

Mr. F. Caverhill—I have much pleasure in seconding the resolution. I have been frequently in the bank and I can speak with knowledge of the politeness and attention of the different officers of the institution.

Mr. M. H. Gault—I can speak in the highest terms of the two agents at Hamilton and Bedford. You have one of the best agents in this country at Hamilton, and the agent at Bedford is all that could be desired. I think it is to the interest of the bank to retain two such good agencies; it was always my policy not to have a large number of agencies, but, at the same time, the Hamilton and Bedford agencies are well placed, and will be very profitable for the bank. At any rate, both are under the management of most excellent men.

The President—It is the opinion of the Board at present that we should retain these two agencies as they practically run themselves without much assistance from us.

The scrutineers reported that the old Board of Directors had been re-elected as follows:—Thomas Craig, Hon. A. W. Ogilvie, E. K. Greene, Alex. Buntin, and Henry Bulmer.

The meeting then adjourned.

At a subsequent meeting of the Board of Directors, Mr. Thomas Craig was elected President and Hon. A. W. Ogilvie Vice-President.—Montreal Gazette July 10th.

It is a remarkable fact that W. A. Elgert, of Frankville, who was so far gone with liver and kidney complaint that his life was despaired of, was cured with four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters. At one time he lay a fortnight without an operation of the bowels. (35)

The Importance of Self-Government.

The Good Book tells us that "He that ruleth himself is mightier than he that taketh a city." We are, then, to infer from this that self-government, though of the utmost importance, is yet a very difficult task; but what a delightful world this would be if every one were to attain to even a moderate degree of self-control. Of all human passions, I think the temper is most difficult to govern, for it needs constant care and watchfulness to keep it under subjection.

There are a great variety of tempers to contend with—the hot and hasty, the slow and sullen, the smooth and treacherous. In fact, all sorts of ill tempers, and occasionally we find a very good temper, that is, one slow to anger, and quick to forgive, but I think the most of us are endowed with a good deal of the "old Adam" in our natures. A fiery temper that flashes at a trifle and as quickly dies away again, though bad enough, is perhaps not to be so much deplored as one which is sullen and revengeful, which will brood over a fancied wrong, growing more bitter by nursing wrath, and must be more injurious to mind and character than a more passionate temper which soon exhausts itself in bluster. We cannot always prevent anger from arising, but we can prevent it gaining the mastery over us. Some persons contend that they feel better to give expressions to their angry emotions. Very well, allowing it to be so, though I very much doubt the truth of this assertion, is it not a very selfish excuse? We cannot think that it adds to the happiness of those around us, or increases their respect for us, to witness our outbursts of passion. How much misery might be avoided if we should check the angry retort before its utterance. Is there any one, unless it be some narrow-minded, self-righteous persons, is there any one who allows himself to use violent and intemperate language, who does not feel sorry and ashamed when the heat of passion is over? Then how much better would it be for them to express regret and acknowledge themselves in the wrong; they would feel far happier and be much more respected by so doing.

How many lives are forever wrecked, not so much by indulging in unrestrained passion, as by a stubborn will which refuses to acknowledge wrong doing? I think there is no more pitiable object in life than a man or woman seeking the aid of man to set aside one of God's most sacred laws. A woman asking to be freed from a husband whom she once loved better than life; a man casting from him into utter ruin the wife he has sworn to cherish and protect. The cause of discord was once but a little cloud, and had it been treated with patience and forbearance would soon have been dissipated, but matured by distrust and bitter recrimination, it poisons domestic peace and separates forever those who would be all in all to each other.

The Jail at Kilmainham.

Kilmainham, where the Dublin prisoners are confined, may be interesting to some of our readers. In 606 an abbey was built by St. Magnend on the spot where the prison now stands, and called Kilmagnend, or Magnend's Church. On the ruins of this abbey Strongbow founded in 1174 a military monastery, whose priors were peers of the Irish Parliament, and were often Lord Chancellors, and Justices, and sometimes even Lord Deputies of Ireland. The institution was more military than monastic, and though the vows of the dwellers in the monastery of the Kilmainham Templars only allowed them to fight the Saracen and Moor, the yet strained a point to turn their swords against the Christian Irishry. They did their work in the Holy Land too, however, making the first crusade with Baldwin, and Tancred and William of Normandy. In the "Gerusalemme Liberata" Tasso mentions the Kilmainham knights; and from Fuller we hear that "all the consent of Europe in the Crusades would have made no music if the Irish harp had been wanting there." Hugo de Clahull was the first prior, and Gerald, son of Maurice, Lord of Kerry, was the last Prior of the Kilmainham Templars. The parish of Kilmainham with its 1200 acres, and the lands for miles around formed the Kilmainham Templars' broad estate. They hunted the stag and wild boar in the woods, called the Phœnix in latter days, which they extended along the southern as well as along the northern banks of the Liffey.

The suburbs of Dublin on this side were formerly woods. A Leinster King furnished to William II. from these woods the oak roof of Westminster Hall, in which, says Stainhurst, writing in the latter part of the sixteenth century, "no English spider webbeth to this day." The Order of Kilmainham Templars was suppressed in Ireland by Edward II., in 1309, the Knights imprisoned in Dublin Castle, and their property made over to the Knights of St. John. Later we learn of Thomas Botiller, Prior of the New Order, coming "out of Ireland with a great quantity of Irish in mail with darts and skeyns to assist Henry the V. at the siege of Rouen;" and that they "did do their devour, as that none were more pleased nor did more damage to their enemies." In 1680, the Duke of Ormond built a new hospital on the site of the ancient priory, where old soldiers might end their days in religious repose.

Driven Mad by a Ghost.

A recent Snydertown (Pa.) despatch to the Philadelphia Times says: Last night Mrs. Moore, a widow, who lives with her young son in an old, dilapidated house at Brush Valley, near here, was startled by hearing a shriek, followed by agonizing yells, in the room next to hers, occupied by her son, a youth about 16 years of age. In a fright she ran into the room and found the boy almost dead with fear and trembling in every limb. She quieted his fears and questioned him, and after considerable delay he told her that about 12 o'clock, while listening to the furiously raging storm, he was startled by seeing through the dim light of a lamp, which burned in the room, a man raising the window. Almost paralyzed with fear he sat up in the bed, unable to move, until by the aid of a vivid flash of lightning he perceived the features of the man to be those of his father, who was killed in the mines five years ago. With the shriek that had so startled his mother he sank on the bed and the intruder fled hastily.

THE MOTHER SEES THE FACE.

When the mother had heard his story she turned her gaze towards her window and beheld the identical face pressed against the window. With a terrific yell she sprang to the window, and raising the sash jumped through, striking the ground, twenty-five feet below, with terrific force and injuring herself fatally. The shrieks and moans of young Moore brought a few neighbors to the spot, and they carried the limp body of the woman into the house, and after a few hours' labor succeeded in bringing her to sensibility. As soon as she fixed her eyes on her son she burst into a violent fit of laughter, in which the son joined and which lasted until both fell to the floor exhausted. On the part of young Moore the fit of laughing was then followed by violent spasmodic attacks. He foamed at the mouth, barked like a dog and made vicious snaps at those who attempted to quiet him.

MADNESS EPIDEMIC.

A young farmer named Herrick went up to him and, while attempting to quiet him, caught hold of his hand. No sooner had he done so than he, too, was seized with fearful spasms and writhed on the floor in intense agony, exhibiting the peculiar symptoms manifested by the others. The few other neighbors that had come to the scene were so badly scared as to be of little assistance, and they fled precipitately, leaving the maniacs alone in the room. Mrs. Moore was stark raving mad and soon the two young men were busy at work demolishing the furniture and striking one another. One of the women, who had at first rushed to the scene, ran home and returned with her father, an old army sergeant named Billheimer, who ran into the room and, grasping Herrick, threw him to the floor and, putting his foot upon his breast, bound him with the bed ropes. He then secured young Moore in a like manner. Mrs. Moore was bleeding from the wounds received from falling out of the window, and lay upon the floor insensible. Lifting her in his arms, Billheimer carried the woman to the open air, the storm having ceased.

A PHYSICIAN IN ATTENDANCE.

One of the neighbors had mounted a horse about one hour before and ridden at full speed across the rough country road in search of a doctor. After a long search he found one and brought him to the stricken family. The young man Herrick was taken home by his father in the morning and another physician attended him. No hope is entertained of Mrs. Moore's recovery. Her son was unusually violent next morning and could scarcely be held by four men. The case has occasioned much excitement among the farmers throughout the neigborhood. Mrs. Moore's husband was killed in the mining region five years ago. She and her son are practical, steady people. Young Herrick is not so violent, but arrangements are being made for his removal to an asylum. Mrs. Moore was in a sinking condition in the evening, and she could hardly live until the morning.

Origin of the Names in the Week.

In the museum at Berlin, in the hall devoted to Northern antiquities, they have the representations from the idols from which the names of the days in our week are derived.

From the idol of the Sun comes Sunday. This idol is represented with his face like the sun, holding a burning wheel with both hands on his breast, signifying his course round the world.

The idol of the Moon, from which comes Monday, is habitated in a short coat like a man, but holding the moon in his hands.

Tuisco, from which comes Tuesday, was one of the most ancient and popular gods of the Germans, and represented in his garments of skins, according to their peculiar manner of clothing. The third day of the week was dedicated to his worship.

Woden, from which comes Wednesday, was a valiant prince among the Saxons. His image was prayed to for victory.

Thor, from whence comes Thursday, is seated in a bed, with twelve stars over his head, holding a sceptre in his hand.

Friya, from whence we have Friday, is represented with a drawn sword in his right hand, and a bow in his left.

Sæter, from which is Saturday, has the appearance of perfect wretchedness; he is thin-visaged, long-haired, with a long beard. He carries a water-pail in his right hand, wherein are fruits and flowers.

There is great loss every season by individuals owning wood lots, and to the public, from carelessness or design in handling fire. In the summer drouths, the leaves and fallen limbs become like tinder, and the cigar stump or emptied pipe, the brands from a camp-fire or pic-nic party, are enough to kindle a great conflagration. Fires are often started from the sparks of a railroad engine, from carelessness in burning brush, or from mischievous boys, just to see the blaze. There is much loss to the owner of the forest burnt over, in trees killed, in fuel and fences consumed, and in the vegetable wealth of leaves and mould burned and dissipated. The forest does not recover, as when it is cut with the axe. It remains for years a blackened desolation in the landscape. In most cases, the whole neighborhood suffers from the reduction of the area of forest, already too small to husband the rain fall, and protect the springs and rivulets, that feed the rivers. This great public evil should have the immediate attention of all our law makers.

THE FARMERS' CORNER.

USEFUL HINTS AND NOTES.

"Evaporating" Fruits and Vegetables.

The term "evaporating" of fruits and vegetables is applied to the use of heated air to carry off the moisture, and as distinguished from drying by the heat of the sun. That this is already an important industry, and is destined to become still more important, is shown by the various "evaporators" now offered, and the numerous letters of enquiry sent us concerning them. We can answer, in a general way, that the use of a current of hot air for the purpose of drying fruits and vegetables, is not patentable, while the various devices for producing the hot air, and applying it to the fruits, etc., may be. There are at least a half a dozen of these devices now offered, and it is not possible for us to say which is the best. So far as we have seen the products of the leading machines, as they are offered in the market, there appears to be very little difference between them. The best advice we can give those who write us letters of enquiry is, to send for the descriptive circulars of each and give them a careful study. It is hardly possible to give a plan for the use of hot air for drying or "evaporating" vegetable substances, without unintentionally using some device covered by a patent. Besides, it must be remembered that the various evaporators and dryers now offered, are subjected to the test of actual use. Any affair that one might make for himself must be experimented with, and in the end will cost more than to purchase one that has already been tested. The different evaporators, so far as we have seen them, or their descriptions, have several advantages over sun-drying. They allow the drying to go on rapidly, so that there is no chance for incipient fermentation. The drying is done in the dark, which prevents discoloration of the article. With apples and other light-colored products they allow the use of sulphur fumes to bleach them and improve their appearance, an operation, which, if properly performed, is not objectionable.

The Best Kinds of Feed for Butter.

The practice of constructing warm barns, and arranging stock and crops for the making of winter butter, is increasing, and can be extended almost indefinitely, under favorable conditions. The great majority of our dairy farmers cease milking in October or November, and there is very little butter made for market during the season of barn and stack feeding. A period of five months every year is a blank in the dairy business. With suitable feed and shelter, no doubt the milking season can be prolonged several months, with increased profit to the dairy farmer. To the men who are aiming at this result, and are sending fresh butter of the gilt-edged stamp to market, through the winter, the question of feed becomes a very important one. At a recent convention of the customers of the creameries in Connecticut, cow-feed was under question, and all agreed in the following important particulars:—"Cotton-seed meal is not desirable, while in very small quantities, it may do no harm, it is sure, if largely fed, to injure the quality of the butter, making it more greasy, giving it the flat taste, and knocking the flavor out." Assuming this to be correct, it is only a caveat against the excessive use of cotton-seed meal. We have used this article years ago, and are now using it, and know nothing so good at the same cost to increase the flow of milk. There is probably no other feed in common use that makes such valuable manure. The daily rations of a Jersey cow are a quart of cotton-seed meal in the morning, one quart at noon, and a half bushel of sliced beets, with three feeds daily of all the good hay she will eat. Fed at the rate of six quarts a day, with only hay rations, we presume the record of the creamery is correct. The butter is hard, of good color, and excellent flavor.

Again:—"Ensilage is a risky feed, not yet sufficiently tested to be used by creamery patrons." This may serve to abate the zeal of our ensilage enthusiasts, and cause them to wait a little before they add to their silos. "Rye bran is to be severely let alone." Again, "Corn-meal stands at the head of grain feeds, though it should be fed carefully, unless mixed with wheat feed, middlings or shorts, which are given the next place." Four bushels of corn and one of oats, ground together, were recommended by one of the most experienced dairymen present. This, we think, will commend itself to the good sense of all farmers who have fed much meal to their cows, and should be a strong argument with them to extend the acreage of their corn crop this year. Corn can be raised at a profit in New England, notwithstanding the competition of the prairie States, and the cheap freights. "Green corn fodder, to secure the best results, should be wilted twenty-four hours before feeding."

These results, reached unanimously by a company of thrifty farmers, wise enough to unite their forces in sustaining a "creamery," and whose pecuniary interests compel observation, should have great weight with all our dairymen. Too many of our farmers rely altogether upon old pasture for the support of their cows in summer. It might pay much better to supplement the grass with cotton-seed meal or corn-meal and middlings, to feed higher in winter, and to keep cows that you could milk ten months in the year. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

Walking for Health.

It is a pity women do not walk more in the open air, as there is no better exercise for the health. House-hold exercise cannot take its place; in-door air is not so pure, and the limits of the house are too small to allow free play of the muscles. A woman who is accustomed to be on her feet almost constantly in the daily routine of the housework, is often a very poor walker; and the good walker sometimes finds herself wearied by the busy house-keeper's round of duties. A friend who lately applied to an eminent physician for counsel in regard to some chronic difficulty of the throat, received as the most important part of the prescription, "plain, wholesome diet, and long walks in the open air." This was because it was seen that an improvement of her general health would put an end to the local trouble. So it is with a great majority of our local ailments; they depend upon the general health. The physician will usually prescribe a tonic, something to tone up the system. The very best of tonics are pure air and exercise, and without these all others are of little use.

Women suffer a good deal from cold feet, even in summer. Walking is the best thing to cure or prevent this trouble; not mere sauntering, but brisk walking, fast and far enough to set the blood in motion.

Scotch Shorthorns.

The Shorthorns bred in Aberdeen and other northern Scotch counties, during the last half-century, have proved thrifty, hardy and profitable—among the best, in fact, of all those reared in the United Kingdom during the same period. The reason of this is, that they are never pampered, but brought up exactly as other cattle. There is one point of difference between the Scotch and English methods of treatment, and this is, that in Scotland they allow their heifer to bring her first calf at twenty-four to thirty months of age, while in England the rule is about thirty-six months. The cows are generally good milkers, and the calf is suffered to run with its dam until it is six to seven months old. In the winter it is fed on turnips, straw, and a little bran and linseed or other meal. By this method stock is reared at a moderate cost, and at present prices pays the farmer handsome profit when sold. Some American breeders prefer the Scotch to the English Shorthorns, and have made large importations of the former, particularly in Kentucky and farther west. They consider the Scotch cattle more hardy, but we must await the rearing of the young stock for years to come to ascertain if this is true.

Poultrymen are sometimes troubled with partial blindness in their young chickens, occasioned, possibly, by too little variety in their food. The eyelids in the morning are stuck together so firmly, that the chicken cannot open them without assistance. When both eyes are in this condition, the chicken can not feed with facility, as it has to be guided by hearing and smell; therefore loses flesh for want of food, droops, and dies. These drooping chicks can often be saved by having their heads dipped in clean water and the eyes washed open. They then see readily, devour their rations greedily, and begin to gain flesh.

MISERY IN NEW YORK.

An Aged Couple Seek Death to Avoid Starvation.

Henry A. Wagner and his wife Teresa, each seventy-five years of age, were lying side by side recently in St. Mary's Hospital, and both were unconscious. The aged couple were found lying in the roadway in the juncture of Cypress Hill and Atlantic avenue, East New York, by a policeman. When discovered they were clasped in each other's arms and were bleeding profusely. The doctors discovered a series of gashes extending across the left arm of each, near the elbow joints. The cuts in the woman's arm were deep and ragged, but no vital artery had been touched. She had lost a quart of blood and was very weak. Her husband's arm was cut in four places, but none of the wounds were serious. He was also weak from the loss of blood. The doctors at first despaired of saving the lives of the aged people, but after the lapse of four hours the sufferers were able to speak. The first action of the old man was to ask for his wife, and the first utterance of the woman was an enquiry after the welfare of her husband.

When questioned by the doctors, the man stated he had inflicted the wounds upon his wife and himself. He said that he was tired of seeing his wife going without food, and being tired of life and hungry himself, he determined to die. He consulted his wife about the matter, and she proposed that he would kill her first and himself afterwards. Wagner was cautioned by the doctors that his evidence might be used against him should he recover; but he said he didn't care, as life no longer had any charm for him.

"What caused you to attempt to kill your wife and then yourself?" the reporter asked.

"My wife had only four meals in two weeks. We would not beg. Neither of us had eaten a morsel for forty-eight hours before I committed the act, and were nearly delirious from hunger. She was afraid that she would die, and I proposed to her that we die together."

"What caused you to select such an out-of-the-way spot for the rash act?"

"My wife proposed Cypress Hill Cemetery and we went there, but finally concluded to die on the road."

"What instrument did you use?"

"A penknife. My wife suggested it. She said the easiest way would be to bleed to death. She held up her arm, and after kissing me good-by, bared it for me. I cut her and then myself with all the strength I had. Then we lay down to die."

Wagner expressed sorrow for the deed, but claimed that at the time he committed it he and his wife were contented to die. He is a pully-block maker by trade, but has had no employment since October, 1881. His wife attempted to take in washing, but she was too old and feeble. Wagner was born in Switzerland seventy-five years ago, and has been married forty-six years. The couple are childless. When the reporter was leaving, the old man said if his wife died he wanted to die, and if she lived he desired to live.—New York World.

In Spite of all the Care He Took.

We saw a boy nailing up a box the other day, containing some articles which he intended sending by express. From the nature of the contents we knew it was essential that the box should not be inverted on the passtage. So we ventured the suggestion to place the much abused "This side up," etc., conspicuously on the corner. A few days after we saw our boy again.

"Heard from your goods yet? Did they get there safely?"

"Every one broke," replied he sullenly. "Lost the hull lot! Hang the express company!"

"Did you put on 'this side up,' as we told you?"

"Yes, I did; an' for fear they shouldn't see it on the cover, I put it on the bottom, too! They've no excuse for such carelessness."

PHENOMENON.—J. R. Anderson of Orange Valley, Artemesia. has a two-year-old heifer which never had a calf, neither is she with calf, yet she made bag this spring and had to be milked, and has since been milked regularly.

One evening last week while the choir of the English Church were at practice, two young ladies came into the church and appropriated two fine large boquettes which were arranged with others to adorn the sanctuary. So says an eye witness.

The Editor of the Dundalk Herald, says he has received so many fine samples of hay he thinks of purchasing a cow for winter, while the Hanover Post man beats him all hollow both as to length of straw and number of heads, and proposes starting a ranch. Now we keep a cow and have been favored with ne'er a straw; we've had the big strawberries however.

The STANDARD the balance of the year to any address for 50 cents. Those who send in their names with the above price during July will receive back numbers to the first of the present excellent story "Stella" together with a copy of "Kendall's Treatise on the Horse," a book of 90 pages worth the money itself, send in your name at once.

FISHING.—As announced, the fishing match between sides chosen by Wm. Levi and Richard Askin, came off on Friday last, resulting in a victory for the latter's side by about 70 fish. There were some 1000 trout brought in altogether, D. Shae bringing home the largest number. (149). Dan must have a peculiar knack of his own for getting his basket filled. Those taking part in the contest were provided with a first class supper at the Mansion, to which full justice was done by the hungry anglers.

Mrs. Richard Haley of Glenelg had her arm broken last Wednesday. Report has it that her husband beat her, and in the melee broke her arm. Such men should get the lash.

Mr. Wm. Sinclair, a son of Mr. Geo. Sinclair, near Arnott, in Holland, was so badly burned in the powder explosion in Winnipeg on the 29th ult., that he died on Saturday last. He was a saddler by trade and would appear to have been working in a shop close by where the explosion took place. The papers say he had both hands and feet burned to a crisp, and the pants burned off his limbs.

THE 12TH IN MARKDALE.—There was a good turn out in this place on the 12th, and order and quietness prevailed througout the day. After dinner a large number repaired to Mr. Walker's grove, where Reverends Corcaran and Casson addressed the Orangemen in a very able manner. The speaking was, however, brought to a sudden termination by a thunder shower. when a double quick march was made for the village. 371 took dinner at the Mansion House, and all left highly pleased with the treatment received and excellent dinner.

An item in last weeks Advance under "Rambling Notes, by Valentine Muggins," insinuates that an assessor not far from Markdale owns property to the value of $6.000, which he has assessed at $1,800. We do not consider it a manly piece of business to make such damaging insinuations. We do not know of a farm of 100 acres in this section that would sell for anything like $6,000, and would judge $4,000 good value for the farm referred to, while we are confident there is not a farm in the neighborhood assessed higher according to real value than the same assessor's farm.

SOCIAL.—The social given on the evening of the 12th under the auspices of the Presbyterian church was fairly attended notwithstanding the wet evening. Refreshments were provided and ice-cream and lemonade served in the Hall. An interesting and varied program was gone through and well sustained, in which the following took part:—J. R. Anderson, Mrs. Potter, J. Richards, Miss Wilson, Miss McDuffie, Miss Lazier, Dr. Armstrong, J. Telford, Miss Trevorrow, Mrs. Trimble, Mr. Brown (jeweller), J. Hill and the choir. The best of order prevailed throughout, and all appeared well pleased with the entertainment. By-the-way, Mr. Murray, student, gave an excuse and Rev. W. Casson said a few words. Proceeds $30.

WILD MUSTARD.—In going through some parts of this County a considerable amount of wild mustard may be seen in the crops, yet not nearly so much as in some older sections. We would strongly urge on the farmers the necessity of pullling the mustard from the crops and being more careful in sowing clean seed, for if there is no more care exercised than appears to be at present on some farms, in a few years the best of the land will be so full of this noxious weed that it will be almost useless to attempt to grow grain on it, while a little care and expense at the present time will enhance the value of the land and in future amply repay any outlay in the matter of eradicating weeds of this and similar classes.

During the past week there has been several displays of rowdyism around one of our hotels. Under the present regime, hotels could not be very well dispensed with, but there are a good many et cetras, such as excessive drinking, swearing, fighting and raising unsemely noises at all hours of the evening, could easily be done without. However, when a man knows his business he will do all he can to keep a respectable house, and not draw a crowd by urging or allowing two or more drunken bullies to start a fight in the vicinity of his premises. We think a great deal of such affairs could be stopped if certain parties would discountenance them, and these parties would eventually reap the benefit themselves.

MANHOOD
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED

SEAL We have recently published a new edition of Dr. CULVERWELL'S CELEBRATED ESSAY on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

STELLA;

OR, AT CROSS PURPOSES.

THE TEMPER OF A FURY.

"My dear cousin, you really make a great deal of fuss over a very small trifle; upon my word there is nothing very much in a kiss."

"You think not? Well, I differ from you. I think a kiss is a very solemn and a very sacred thing."

"I will remind you of that speech some day."

"You will never remind me of it, because I hope I shall never see you again—never, never, as long as I live!" cried Stella, stamping her foot.

"After that there is nothing left for me to do but to retire," said Norman, reaching out his hand for his hat. He was getting angry too by this time. After all he was perhaps well rid of this little spit-fire with her high flown moral notions.

"You will perhaps be kind enough to make my adieux to Mrs. King," he said, frigidly. "I regret that, owing to what you have just so plainly and unflatteringly told me, I am quite unable to do myself the honour of calling upon her again. I shall leave Valency to night; you will, no doubt, explain to her the excellent reasons which you have against the family arrangement which my grandfather and she thought of. It is perhaps fortunate for me that I am spared the trial of being saddled with a wife who, whatever are her undoubted charms of person, is blessed with the temper of a fury, and the vindictiveness of a virago."

That was Norman Allingham's parting shot. At the conclusion of this speach he made his cousin a low bow of mock humility and departed.

As the door closed upon him a great dismay fell upon her. She stood for a few seconds rooted to the spot, feeling strangely cold and frightened. Then, suddenly, without rhyme or reason, down she sank upon her knees, burying her face in the sofa cushions, and burst into a flood of tears.

Were they all anger and indignation those tears that fell in showers from her burning eyes? Stella thought so. And yet down at the bottom of her heart there was something else that was quite different, disgust at herself and the fierce and angry words she had uttered; and a wild and bitter regret that he had taken her at her word, and had gone.

"Oh! what a stupid, ill-tempered, odious girl he must take me for!" burst almost unwillingly from her lips.

"Stella!" cried Mrs. King, coming suddenly in. "My dear, what on earth is the matter?" and, looking around the room, "where is your cousin? Is he gone? I meant to have asked him to dinner. Did he say when he will come back?"

Stella rose from her knees and brushed away the traces of her tears.

"Mamma, he has gone away, and he will never come back again; he will leave Valency this evening."

"What on earth do you mean?" cried Mrs. King, aghast.

"I mean that I will never marry Mr. Allingham, mamma, and I have told him so."

"Stella, you must be mad! How did you dare to say such a thing to him, after all I have told you, and when you know of what importance this marriage is? But it is not too late, I will send after him."

"Mamma, you will do nothing of the sort," cried Stella, catching hold of her mother's hand, for she was already at the door. "The man has insulted me, and I will never marry him."

"How can you be so childish? How has he insulted you? What can he have possibly said?"

But Stella still would say nothing more.

He had insulted her, and she would never marry him, no, never—never! She would sooner die than do so; she hoped she would never see him again. That was all that Mrs. King could extract from her after more than an hour of entreaty, of argument and of every threat that she could possibly invent in order to shake her daughter's resolution.

"He is a horrible, dreadful, wicked young man, mamma. I can't tell you what he said, I had sooner never repeat it; but I perfectly hate and detest him, and I hope I shall never see him again!"

CHAPTER V.

A FATAL FALL.

The immediate consequence of Stella's rebellious and undutiful conduct was that Mrs. King had to write to her father-in-law.

How many hours she sat up into the night composing the epistle which was to bear to him such ungracious and unpleasant news; how many rough copies she made of it; how many times she altered and remodelled every sentence and every word, it boote not here to relate. Sufficient to say that in the end the letter was written and posted.

It was hard work certainly to make out a good case for her daughter; to tell the old man what had happened, without mortally offending him, and without closing the door for good and all to any hopes there might be for a future arrangement of the matter. But Mrs. King was a clever woman, and she proved herself equal to the emergency.

Her daughter was very young, she wrote; the dear girl had been quite scared at the notion of a lover; she had hardly known what it meant. And Norman had been rather too hasty; he had not given her time enough—young men were so impetuous. Poor little Stella had been frightened into tears; she had sent him away, poor child, hardly understanding what she was doing. But, of course, Norman must not lose heart; he must try again by and by. When she was a little older she would be certain to be more impressible. Her answer—the answer of such a mere child—must not be taken as final. Then, of course, there would be Cecily to fall back on; but then Cecily was but a baby—only sixteen. She knew nothing about it at all—nothing had been told her. In point of fact, the whole matter had better be allowed to rest for the next year, and then she felt persuaded that everything would come right.

That was about the gist of the letter, and it gave her many a sleepless hour before it was finally written and despatched.

After it was gone, Mrs. King addressed the "dear girl" in very plain and unvarnished words.

"You are a wicked, disobedient, rebellious child!" she said to her; "and you have done a great deal of harm by your obstinacy, not only to yourself, but also to your sister and me."

"I am very sorry, mamma."

"One thing I must insist upon, and that is that you do not breathe a single word of all this to Cecily; remember that she too is to have her chance by and by; and it is of the utmost importance that she should not know anything about your cousin, or what has happened in regard to him. Promise me this, Stella."

"Yes, mamma, I will certainly promise that," and Stella was too thoroughly ashamed of the whole scene, and too much filled with indignation at her cousin's parting remarks, to desire to repeat what had taken place to anybody, even to Cecily.

"I will not speak of it to Cecily at all," she said; "but I certainly pity her if she is ever to become that young man's wife."

"That is not your business, my dear," replied her mother, with asperity.

But of course Cecily asked what had happened, and why Stella had been kept at home on that particular morning.

"Oh! it was nothing," she answered, carelessly. "Mamma only wanted to talk to me about—poor papa's father."

"How dull; and did she not guess about your going to Madame Halevy's dance, Stella?"

"Not a bit."

"Then you are lucky: I made sure you were going to catch it. I wonder where your good-looking partner is, and who he was?"

"Oh, he was nobody at all," answered Stella, getting very red, "and I feel almost sure he has gone away again."

"How do you know?"

"Oh! because Madame Gameau told me so: she said he was only a traveller passing through," and she blushed again at the ingenuity of her own invention.

"Oh! so you did take the trouble to inquire, Miss Stella?" laughed Cecily.

"For goodness sake be quiet about it," cried Stella, irritably. "Horrid man, I wish I had never seen him! I never want to speak of him again."

"And I, who thought we were going to have a romance in the family—I only wish I had had your chances, Stella; I feel quite sure I should have made a better use of them."

Stella, who began to realize that nobody could have made a worse use of what Cecily called "her chances" than she had done, bit her lip in silence, and felt very much inclined to cry.

By degrees, however, the little family settled down again into its accustomed habits. Madame Halevy's fancy dance and Norman Allingham's visit became things of the past, and were forgotten, or at all events, were never alluded to.

The two girls went on with their studies, going daily to and from the College. Often and often, as they walked side by side through the picturesque narrow streets, and across the Cathedral precincts on their way to their classes, whilst Cecily was chattering gayly about their lessons or their school friends, Stella, hardly listening to what she was saying, was asking herself whether indeed the hard things that Norman had said of her were true.

Was it indeed the case that she had so terrific a temper that any man might congratulate himself upon getting free of her? For that was the fearful thing he had told her. Was she indeed such a "virago"—that was the word he had used—as he had said?

Stella did not remember ever having lost her temper in the same way in her life before. To no one had she ever spoken out so boldly and so angrily as she had done to this young man. She had imagined that her scorn and her just indignation were covering him with penitnence and remorse, and lo! he had turned round upon her and told her that she was a virago!

And she had not wanted him to go, she was quite sure of that; but then, what had she wanted him to do! Stella did not quite know.

Of one thing, however, she felt perfectly certain. She was far more angry now with Norman Allingham for going away than she had ever been for his kissing her!

In due time Mrs. King received an answer from her father-in-law.

His letter was perfectly polite; but not altogether satisfactory.

He was sorry that Mrs. King had not been able to exercise a more salutory and restraining influence over her eldest daughter, more especially as he understood from his grandson that the young lady had apparently a very violent and ill-regulated temper. However, as she was still so young, and her sister, moreover might prove more amenable to reason and duty as she grew older, Mr. King professed himself willing to let the matter lie in abeyance for the space of a year, according to her own suggestion; but she must not be surprised that if she and her daughters were, by that time unable to come to a definite decision as to his propositions, that he should then consider himself free to make other plans for the future of his grandson, and for the ultimate disposition of his fortune.

This was not altogether satisfactory, still it left the door of hope still open with regard to future arrangements. Mrs. King, like a wise woman, did not take Stella into her confidence concerning this letter; but allowed the matter to drop entirely. She could not but believe that the childish and irrational prejudice which Stella had so mysteriously taken against her cousin would certainly wear itself away in the course of time.

As she grew older Mrs. King felt sure that Stella would become more sensible. And, besides, there was always the chance for Cecily to be kept in mind.

So the widow and her daughters went on with the routine of their daily, uneventful existence. The two girls went to their classes, and the mother lived a retired and tranquil life. And spring wore itself into summer, and summer into autumn and winter, before anything of any moment occurred to disturb the serenity of the little English family in the old house in the Cathedral Square.

That year there was a wonderful long frost—it lasted for six weeks without a break. Every pond and every river in the country was frozen over, the ground was hard and white, and icicles clung to the eaves of the pointed roofs, and from every niche in the fretted carving in the gray old Cathedral towers.

There was a sheet of water in the public gardens, where it soon became the fashion for all the young and active persons of both sexes to repair daily in order to skate upon its hard and frozen surface from morning till night.

Skating became the rage. Whole families took up their abode upon the ice from morning till dusk, taking out provisions with them and making up little merry picnics together in the intervals of the fascinating pastime.

It was holiday time, and the classes were for the time in abeyance. All the young girls who were Stella and Cecily's school fellows were, of course, bitten with the general mania.

It was next to impossible that Mrs. King should refuse to allow her girls to join in so innocent and so healthy a recreation. She allowed them to go down to the gardens every morning to skate with the other young people; and every afternoon, when she thought they had been there long enough, she would go herself, and fetch them away with her.

There was a short cut between her house and the gardens by which she was in the habit of going to them. A steep flight of stone steps led down between two rows of small and poverty stricken houses from the Cathedral square, which stood high on the top of the hill, to the gate of the gardens, which lay low down in the flat of the valley beneath. By using these steps you could cut off a corner of the road.

One afternoon Mrs. King, being rather later than usual in starting out to join her daughters, ran very quickly down these steps. They were coated over with ice, and very slippery. The heel of her boot caught and she was thrown down, falling the whole length of the flight, from the top to the bottom, upon her back.

She picked herself up, feeling only rather faint and shaken, and managed to get on to the gardens; but she looked so white and ill when she got there, that all her acquaintances came forward anxiously to enquire what was the matter with her.

She professed herself to be quite unhurt, only a little shaken by the accident, and she even managed to walk home between her daughters, with a hand on each of their shoulders. But a woman of a certain age is not likely to fall in such a manner without sustaining serious injury.

By nightfall Mrs. King was in bed and the doctor had been sent for, and by the next morning everybody knew that she was very ill indeed.

There was supposed to be some damage to the spine, and it was feared that there were other internal injuries of a grave nature. Be that as it may, fever set in and agravated the evil, and in a few days it became the good little French doctor's painful duty to tell the two sobbing girls that they would soon be left motherless.

When Mrs. King knew herself to be dying she sent everybody else out of the room save her eldest daughter, and, calling her to her bedside, she reached out her thin, fever-wasted hand to her.

"Listen to me, Stella; I am going to die."

"Oh! no, no, mamma," sobbed the poor girl, burying her face upon the bed, "don't say so; I know you will get better."

"No, my dear, I shall never be any better, and don't cry, because I want you to be strong and brave, and to pay attention to what I say to you."

"Yes, mamma," choking back her tears.

"Well, as soon as I am dead you are to sit down and write to your grandfather; you are to tell him that you and Cecily are quite friendless, and to ask him what you are to do. Do you understand?"

"Yes, mamma."

"I think he will send for you both to go and live at Wrexham, and you must go like good girls, and do anything else he tells you. He will want one of you to marry your cousin Norman, who came here last spring. You must promise me, Stella, that if he asks you again you will marry him, or if he does not ask you, that you will use every effort to make Cecily accept him if he proposes to her. Promise me this, my dear."

"Yes, I promise," said Stella, with chattering teeth, she would have promised anything at such a moment.

"If either of you marry him you will both be provided for, and I can feel that you will not be cast out into the world to earn your own living. I cannot speak much more, dear; take care of your sister and try and be a mother to her. God bless you, my child!"

She stopped, faint and gasping, and lay back exhausted among her pillows. Stella, in terror, summoned the doctor and the nurse from the adjoining room.

Mrs. King never spoke again.

By nightfall Stella and Cecily were orphans indeed.

CHAPTER VI.

THE INMATES OF WREXHAM.

The winter sunshine came palely in through the four tall windows of the great dining room at Wrexham Hall.

The silver urn was hissing and sputtering on the table, the old fashioned red and gold Derby tea cups were set out in a row upon the snowy cloth, the hot dishes were all upon the table, and a large black-edged envelope lay by Mr. King's plate; but there was nobody down yet.

The room was large and lofty, and the table laid for three only, looked almost lost in the midst of the long stretches of well worn Turkey carpet that reached away in seemingly interminable vistas into its furthermost corners. The walls were panelled, and the ceiling was carved, and there was a huge and hideous dark mahogany sideboard at the far end of the room that frowned sombrely down upon the somewhat scanty remainder of the furniture.

Presently the door opened softly, and a lady glided noiselessly in. She was a short, slender woman of between forty and fifty; her pale, lustreless hair was thrown back beneath a large muslin cap, her features were small and insignificant, her eyes not altogether pleasant in expression; there was a look of cunning about her—a sort of cat like appearance in her every movement. She came creeping in like a person who is upon her guard, and is bent upon some underhand action. Yet she was only coming in to make the tea.

Her name was Finch—Mrs. Finch—and she was a cousin by marriage of Mr. King's, and, being a widow and in reduced circumstances, was thankful to come and live at Wrexham for a small salary, to act as her cousin's housekeeper, and to superintend the domestic arrangements of the house.

Advancing to the table, she first of all made the tea, then, there being no letters by her own plate, she made the tour of the table and examined those that were by the other two places.

Norman's were soon disposed of—a couple of bills, and invitations from some neighbors whose crest upon the envelope betrayed their identity, and a circular from the "Hunt Servants' Benefit Society." Mrs. Finch, having ascertained that there was nothing interesting or entertaining in any of them, walked to the other side of the table where her eye instantly rested upon the black broad-edged missive that lay by the old gentleman's plate. Her eyes lighted up instantly with a gleam of comprehension.

"From France!" she murmured. "Black edged, and not the mother's writing. Can it be that one of them is dead? It must be from one of those girls."

Then she dropped it suddenly because there was a footstep outside the door; when it opened she was back at her own place busying herself among the teacups.

Norman Allingham came in slowly, whistling, with his hands in his pockets.

"Good-morning, Finchy. Old boy not down yet?"

"Not yet. Shall we begin breakfast without him, do you think?"

Norman strolled around to his place and opened his letters, tossing them carelessly aside after just glancing at them.

"Oh! I dare say he won't mind our beginning; everything will be stone cold if we wait."

"Hush!" interrupted Mrs. Finch. "Here is your grandfather."

The door opened once more, and a very tall and painfully thin old gentleman entered. He was so thin that he suggested the idea of a living skeleton; his clothes hung loosely about him; it seemed, indeed, as though it was with difficulty that they kept their place at all; his face, keen and sharpened like a hatchet, was full of eager energy, his glittering, hawk-like eyes seemed to be looking in every direction at once; his hands were long-fingered and claw-like.

As he came in he looked keenly at Mrs. Finch and his grandson as though to find out what they had been talking about.

They both wished him good morning, deferentially. Mrs. Finch expressed a hope that he had slept well.

"Umph! didn't sleep a wink," he answered, ungraciously. "Why on earth haven't you begun breakfast?"

"We thought you would like us to wait for you," said Mrs. Finch, meekly, beginning to pour out the tea.

"I was just suggesting that we should begin," said Norman.

"Quite right; much more sensible!" And then the old gentleman sat down, and opened his black-edged letter. He read it twice attentively through—apparently it was not a lengthy epistle; then he folded it up, and put it in his pocket without a word.

Mrs. Finch was burning with curiosity to know what a black-edged letter with the Valency postmark might portend. Mr. King, glancing up saw her eyes fixed askance toward it as he folded it up.

He rubbed his lean hands one over the other with a chuckle.

"You'd give your ears to know what it's about, wouldn't you, Harriet?" he said, maliciously.

Mrs. Finch turned very red.

"My dear cousin! as if I should presume to speculate about your correspondence! Really, how can you imagine such a thing! But you are always fond of a joke?" and she tried to turn it off with a laugh.

"And a very good joke it is, too," laughed Mr. King. "Now, I dare say you studied the postmark and the handwriting earefully before I came down?"

"I give you my word of honor——" cried the lady, indignantly.

"Tut, tut? don't give away what you haven't got, my good lady. Give me my tea instead; that will be more to the purpose."

Mrs. Finch handed him his tea in offended silence.

Norman, willing to soothe her feelings, asked her what she was going to do that day.

"I shall walk over to Barfield and see my darling child," said Mrs. Finch with a smile.

"Perhaps I will come with you," said Mr. Allingham, kindly. "It is a nice frosty morning; just the day for a long walk."

Mrs. Finch beamed with smiles.

"Thank you; that will be very nice of you, Norman," she said, gratefully.

But Mr. King looked savagely across the table at his grandson.

"What do you want to go to Barfield to day for? Why, Sir Edgar was only dining here last night. You cannot want to see his mother, and there's nobody else there but the children. You can't want to look at Lily Finch! I suppose you would like my grandson to marry your daughter, madam?" turning savagely round upon her.

"Oh! Mr. King, how can you be so cruel, so unjust, as to say such things! As if I and my poor child, in our humble and dependent positions, would ever dare——"

And here Mrs. Finch melted into tears behind her pocket-handkerchief.

The Training of Children.

There is great need of self-government in the care and training of children, we should never give way to anger before them; when it is considered how contagious are all the human emotions, how the frown will excite an answering frown, as smiles will kindle smiles; how the rude jest will provoke the insulting reply of people of a larger growth, can we wonder that children are quick to imitate the example or their elders? Neither should we ever punish a child when under the influence of anger; it may cost us hours of bitter unavailing regret; far better is it to remain silent for a time, until we can control our feelings, then reason with the child, show him wherein he has done wrong, then if he really merits punishment make him understand that it is done through love and a desire for his welfare.

A MIDNIGHT RIDE.

A Story of Adventure in the Southwest.

Williams, Arizona, is on the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, at the foot of Bill William's Mountain. Nearly opposite the depot is Dr. Bishop's office. It was in that office that a strange adventure began.

"About the middle of last November," said Dr. Bishop, "on a very dark and stormy night, after reading until quite late, I turned down the light and was soon asleep. It must have been 11 o'clock when I was awakened by a knock at my front door. I asked what was wanted. The answer came that a man had been badly hurt and required my presence at once. After lighting a candle the door was opened, in stepped two gentlemen, both well dressed, and both indicating by their faces that their education had been in no wise neglected. In fact, they were Eastern born and Eastern bred.

"The spokesman, who was the taller of the two, and who, by the way, was a splendid type of manhood, urged upon me the necessity of being somewhat in a hurry about making my preparation; 'for,' said he, 'you must go with us, and we have a long ride to take before morning.' The Doctor demurred at going at all, and said that it was certainly a very strange proceeding to ask a man of 50 years of age to go out on such a night, and especially with two men of whom he knew nothing whatever.

"It doesn't make a particle of difference who we are, what we are, or where we come from," remarked the tall stranger. "You have got to go with us, and the quicker you make up your mind to do so the pleasanter it will be for all concerned."

"How was the man hurt?" inquired the doctor.

"He was shot," was the answer.

Arguments based on the age and health of physicians were of no avail, and so it came that hurried preparations were made, and the party were out in the cool, damp air of the night. It took but a few moments for the strangers to find their horses and point out a splendid big chestnut, whose every motion and form proved him to be thoroughbred, as the animal upon which our friend, the doctor, was to make the unknown journey.

"That is your horse, doctor," said the stranger. "He is a good one, and as sure footed as any man in Arizona. You need never be afraid of him for a moment; he is as gentle as a kitten."

In the saddle went the now thoroughly mystified man of medicine, and the two strangers mounted two horses nearly, if not quite, the equals of the chestnut stallion. The party had hardly got clear of the lights of midnight lamps at Williams, when a halt was called, and our M. D. was informed that it would be necessary to blindfold him, as his companions had no idea of allowing him the faintest conception of the direction in which the trio were travelling.

The doctor, of course, objected to this kind of treatment, but he was quickly overpowered and compelled to submit himself to the inevitable. A sack, which one of the party carried, was quickly drawn over his head, and then they were again ready for advance.

The horses were given the spur with the admonition to the doctor to "give him the free rein," and away the band dashed. On they rode, hour after hour, up hill and down hill, now crossing a narrow stream, now a broader one, into and across arroyas, through what seemed to be dense forests, and again on the sandy plains, never once stopping, not even speaking a loud word, the whole idea being bent on the early arrival at some specified point. Night began to break into morning and morning into broader day, the sun came up in all its Western splendor, and yet our travellers never once spoke or stopping. It must have been 8 o'clock when all at once the rein of the chestnut stallion was grasped and a halt called. And now, for the first time since midnight, Dr. Bishop was allowed to look around him, his forced blindness having been removed by his guides.

They had halted immediately in front of a small but neat appearing log house, the door of which stood open. Only three persons were in sight, the two strangers, companions in the night's ride, and another man whom the Doctor had not seen before. "Go down to the brook, Doctor, take a drink of water, and refreshing bath, and by that time breakfast will be ready."

"I did as directed," said the Doctor, "and I don't believe there is another such stream of water in Arizona. I can assure you it was to me the grandest bath I ever took."

As yet the surgeon had not seen his patient, but breakfast was soon disposed of, the bacon and beans being devoured with relish, and then the patient was disclosed lying upon a pile of Navajo blankets in one corner of the log building.

"He must have been a man 30 years of age, black hair, black eyes, and fully six feet tall and heavy set in proportion, but every pound of weight seemed to be muscle," said Dr. Bishop. "I knelt down beside him and found that the wound was immediately over the heart, and that it had been made by a large-sized revolver."

The preliminary examination and a few questions elicited the fact that although a 45 calibre ball was still inside, yet it was in no means dangerous. The ball was probed for and extracted, the patient never uttering a complaint. The wound was bandaged up, an application prepared for its dressing, and the surgeon's mission was ended. All day and the first part of the evening was spent in the camp, and then the horses were again saddled, and the ride homeward was only a repetition of the night before, including the blindfolding of the Doctor.

"We arrived in Williams at 4 a. m., before anybody was moving," said Dr. Bishop, "and I was landed in my little home here none the worse for my thirty-six hours' experience. The tall stranger, without asking me as to my charges, immediately counted out $50, and, handing it to me, remarked that they were a little hard up just now, but would pay me fully in a short time."

The Doctor went on to state that the strangest part of the whole affair happened only a few days ago. "The wounded man came over to my office just before the train pulled out, and laying $100 on my desk, remarked that I ought to consider myself paid. Rushing out, he just caught the train, and that is the last I have ever heard of any of the trio."

"Why didn't you stand aside and let that woman pass?" asked a policeman of a negro. "'Case she's my wife, sah. She makes me stan' aroun' at home, but when I ketches her on der street I lets her take her chances, sah. Ef yer want ter see a man wid p'liteness bo'n in him, come up ter my house an' see dis ole man hop roun' der yard."

Harper's Bazar is authority for the dictum that a widow should be married in a bonnet. In our opinion this idea is wrong. By the time the widow has selected the style of bonnet in which she wishes to appear at the ceremony the groom will have lost patience and gone elsewhere for a wife. The best thing for a widow to be married in is in a hurry. Unless she has money. Then she can take her time.

A New York lady who has just moved to this city was called upon by one of her neighbors the other day, who opened the conversation by asking, "How do you like your new house?" "Not at all," was the discontented answer. "I suffer so much from insomnia." "Strange," answered the neighbor, sympathetically "and in a new house, too. You must set a trap." She evidently thought insomnia was New York for mice.

Something to Make Us Pause and Think.

Philadelphia has been horrified at the discovery of the skeletons of babies (nobody knows how many babies—the coroner grimly hints at hundreds) in the cellar of an old man over 80 years of age, who, for the greater part of his life has been known as a malpractitioner of the worst repute. The whole case is ghastly and brutal beyond words; we have the doting old man jabbering behind his cell door; his reputed wife and son eager to convict him and to be first with their terrible testimony; and the zeal of reporters and detectives to unearth and expose the women who have been his victims during forty years.

It really matters very little what becomes of Hathaway. His work in the world is done. But the deeper horror which lies below is, that this man was only an agent to meet an already existing and urgent demand. The Thug is always ready when the Thug is needed. The fact that he was needed by hundreds of young mothers, both single women and wives, to murder their children, is the fact which should give us panse, Public reprobation falls heavily on Hathaway, but nothing is said of these young girls or the men who had driven them in their despair to murder, to save themselves from shame. We hear nothing, either, of the state of society among us; the extravagant habits among the very poor, which make a married mother prefer to see her babe strangled under her eyes rather than undertake the expense of raising it.

Here is a matter of consideration, not only for clergymen, wives, and mothers, but for men. We are all in the habit of remitting such moral questions to the attention of the church. It is men of the world that they concern. They have their code of honesty and justice—not a bad code, either. How do these skeletons and the story they tell comport with that code?—New York Tribune.

Editorial Enterprise

One day a year or two ago a Greenville, S. C., editor heard that a man was to be lynched in a locality about fifteen miles away, and he put a new pencil in his pocket, hired the fastest horse in town and started for the scene. When he arrived he found a crowd under a tree, and in the circle was the prisoner—a villainous chap, who had committed a heinous offense. The crowd had started to hang him, but several citizens had advanced such arguments in favor of permitting the law to take its course that it had about been decided to take the rascal back to jail. Williams drove up, jumped down, and a minute or two learned that the affair was off. He had driven fifteen miles to report a case of lynching, and his disgust was profound. Mounting a stump, he began:

"Gentleman look at that thar'hoss. I've foundered him to get here and see this hanging. It will be $200 out of my pocket, and the only return will be a three-liner in the News, saying that you concluded not to hang. Gentlemen, has patriotism died out of this country?"

No! no! no!" yelled the crowd.

"Does it make any particular difference to this man whether he is hung now or three months later?"

"No! no!"

"Gentlemen' I believe in law and order, but I've driven fifteen miles, foundered a hoss, and feel a bit broke up. I don't say that I want to see this man hung, and I don't say that lynching is the best plan, but if he should be swung up and I should be asked to sit on the coroner's jury and bring in a verdict of suicide I don't see how I could refuse. Gentlemen, look at that ar' hoss!"

"Swing him up!" yelled twenty men.

"Look at that wreck of a once noble hoss and tell——"

"Hooray!" shouted the crowd, and up went the man to be left suspended until dead.

Comparison, more than reality, makes men happy, and can make them wretched.—Feltham.

A Persian poet gives the following instructions on this important matter: When thou art married, seek to please thy wife, but listen not to all he says. From a man's side a rib was taken to form the woman, but never was there seen a rib quite straight. And wouldst thou straighten it? It breaks, but bends not. Since, then, it is plain that crooked is woman's temper, forgive her faults and blame her not; nor let her anger thee, nor coercion use, as all in vain attempting to straighten what is curved.

The Effect of Blizzards on Cattle

I have seen blizzards on the plains that swept through a man who was clad in heavy woolens and fur overgarments as though he was dressed in tarlatan. I have known parties of buffalo hunters, men used to hardship, and whose stomachs were filled with buffalo marrow, and who were wrapped in blankets and robes, to freeze to death in their waggons while endeavoring to escape from the unendurable, icy blasts of an arctic blizzard. Cattle, weak and ill-fed on frost-bitten brass, disappear before these storms. They drift before the wind. As they pass by the air is filled with the sound of their mournful moaning. They wander staggeringly along over the trackless plains, vainly endeavoring to find water with which to quench the intense thirst produced by exceeding cold weather. The water holes are frozen. The weaker cattle drop out of the herd. They lie down to die. The snow drifts around them. They are freezing to death, and are still consumed by raging fever. The wolves attack them as they lie on the frozen ground unable to rise, unable to protect themselves. The cry of despair uttered by the wretched animals when they realize that the horrible death of being eaten alive by carnivorous animals is their doom, is an unearthly one. As the peculiar bellow of an animal when it finds the scent of the blood of one of its fellows on the ground excites the herd with the information: "Here one of us has been slain," and renders them unmanageable, so does the death cry of a feeble cow frighten the drifting herd. They disappear down the wind. The wolves close in on the doomed animal. She struggles desperately to arise. In vain. The hungry wolves attack her. They tear her open. They drag her entrails out and devour them before her eyes. She dies, and the wolves pick her bones and then gallop after the herd.

A Word for the English Sparrow.

Farmers in the neighborhood of Reading, Pa., advance the theory that since the onslaught on the English sparrows, which is permitted by recent legislative enactment, there has been a remarkable increase in the damage to crops by the Hessian fly and the wheat worm. The farmers attribute the ravages of these insects in the main to the destruction of the sparrows.

At a recent sale at auction of old government medical supplies, at St. Louis, amongst other things one man bought 17,308 pills for thirty-eight cents. A local paper says: "The books and instruments sold had been used before, but the pills were entirely new."

Twenty Years A Sufferer.

R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—Twenty years ago I was shipwrecked on the Atlantic Ocean, and the cold and exposure caused a large abscess to form on each leg, which kept continually discharging. After spending hundreds of dollars, with no benefit, I tried your "Golden Medical Discovery" and now, in less than three months after taking the first bottle, I am thankful to say I am completely cured, and for the first time in ten years can put my left heel to the ground. I am yours.

WILLIAM RYDER,

Thousands of women bless the day on woich Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" was made known to them. In all those derangements causing backache, dragging-down sensations, nervous and general debility, it is a soverign remedy. Its soothing and healing properties render it of the utmost value to ladies suffering from "internal fever," congestion, inflammation, or ulceration. By Druggists,

A Voice from the United States.

FOO CHOO'S BALSAM OF SHARK'S OIL positively Restcres the Hearing, and is the Only Absolute Cure for Deafness known. This Oil is abstracted from peculiar species of small White Shark, caught in the Yellow Sea, known as Carcharodon Rondeletii. Every Chinese fisherman knows it. Its virtues as a restorative of hearing were discovered by a Buddhist Priest were discovered about the year 1410. Its cures were so numerous, and many so seemingly miraculous, that the remedy was officially proclaimed over the entire Empire. Its use became so universal, that for over 300 years no Deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.

Hear what the Deaf say:

It has performed a miracle in my case.
I have no unearthly noises in my head, and hear much better.
I have been greatly benefited.
My deafness helped a great deal—think another bottle will cure me.

Its virtues are unquestionable and its curative character absolute, as the writer can personally testify, both from experience and observation. Write at once to Haylock and Jenney, 7 Dey Street, New York, enclosing $1 and you will receive by return a remedy that will enable you to hear like anybody else, and whose curative effects will be permanent. You will never regret doing so."—Editor of Mercantile Review.

LOOKING OUT THE BACK DOOR.

A friend of ours wished to hire a farmer for a wealthy neighbor, and we mentioned one who was wanting an engagement. Knowing that our friend had been to see this farmer, we asked the result. His reply was, in substance: "Yes, I went there; I went around to the back door and came away, knowing that he would not suit." The front doors of many farm houses are rarely opened. The back door is in constant use. One need not go far in any locality to find the outlet of the kitchen sink ending in a sort of ditch, which is supposed to carry off the waste water, but which only allows it to soak away and saturate the ground near the back of the house. The seldom used front door is opened when a small coffin is to be taken out. The minister speaks of "the mysterious dispensations of Providence." They are not at all mysterious. Bad sink drains at the back of the house are sure to bring typhoid fever and other sickness. Let the back door surroundings be looked to. If nothing better can be done, carry the kitchen wastes to a cesspool a distance from the house, where they can soak away far below the surface. Prohibit all throwing out of slops at the back door. The ground soon becomes charged with matters that ferment and bred disease. Where pigs are kept, and includes every farm, there should be a pail to receive all animal and vegetable matters, and daily emptied Nothing of the kind should be thrown out at the back of the house. Where there there is such a disease-breeding sink spout as we have mentioned, let provisions be at once made to carry off the water to a cesspool, and cover up the saturated ground with dry earth. Let the back yard to the house always be kept scrupulously neat.—American Agriculturist.

A large meeting of citizens and influential ratepayers was held at the "Queens Hotel," in this place, on the evening of the 21st, for the purpose of considering the advisability of holding an Agricultural Show in this place this fall, should the Township Society not feel disposed to hold their Fall Show here. It was deemed advisable to have a show here at all events, and $150 was subscribed towards assisting the same which amount however will be paid over to the Township Society, provided they hold their Fall Show in Holland Centre, otherwise the amount will be greatly increased and an independent show will be held here.

A Model Housewife.—A Girl's Romance.—A Hint to the Damsels.—Fine for the Girls.

A French-Canadian Housewife.

A word about this French-Canadian housewife (writes a correspondent)—though she deserves chapters: I have drifted of late into some of the most desolate and poverty-stricken collections of wretched huts which the mind can conceive,—which, indeed, it is next to impossible for an American to conceive at all,—hamlets where the men, with gaunt, burnt faces, long matted hair, forms twisted in middle age as with us at 80, by reason of privation, exposure, and unsettled hopelessness, and clothes altogether indescribable in their meanness, appear to the visions like some spectres from some raft of a "Medusa." But even here I saw no woman, young or old, who was not neat in her personal appearance, painfully clean as to the care of her house, and apparently in the habit of doing three-fourths of all the work that was done. The amount of labor that this poor but contented creature performs is nothing less than marvelous. Premising that before the age of 35 she is usually the mother of from six to twelve children—most French-Canadian girls are married before they are 18—let us consider her work for a moment; she has first of all the care of her children, which is not a slight thing, even though they are the most careful and self-reliant of all the world's urchins; then she does all the cooking, baking her bread out in the sun in a stone oven built near the house; she does all the washing and mending of clothes; she does all her own sewing and knitting, and, in some parts, spinning; she keeps all the money of the household, and makes all the purchases; she scrubs the front steps and all the floors of the living rooms in her house every day, and she whitewashes the outside of her house once a fortnight or so; if they have a cow she milks and cares for it; and then (we have dealt thus far only with the incidental occupations by which spare moments are filled up) she works all day in the field with the spade, hoe, or rake. If she is near salt-water she also salts down barrels of tom-cod and flounders for the family's winter use. If she lives near a town she also goes in with the horse and chaurette to the market, and knits while she is not selling produce, on two days of the week. The race does not anywhere afford a more superb spectacle of industry than this woman presents. And with it all she manages to keep, if not a fresh, at least a bright and cheery look upon her face; she dresses herself for church well and tastefully, and carries her good clothes as if she was accustomed to nothing else; and her children, particularly the girls, are models of cleanliness and good order. This, bear in mind, is as true of the poorest and most isolated hamlets as it is of the well-to-do suburban villages.

An American Girl's Romance.

There is a romance attached to the history of the Countess Potkamer, whose death in Germany was announced a few days since, which interests a circle of acquaintances extending over a large territory. The countess was Miss Josephine Parsons, and went in her childhood from New York to Seneca Falls with her parents perhaps, fifteen years ago. She early developed a critical taste for music, and about seven years ago was sent to the university at Leipzig, Germany, to perfect her musical education. This accomplished, she returned to her home in Seneca Falls. It was learned then by those who were nearest to her that she had "left her heart behind," and there was a conditional engagement of marriage between her and the young Count Von Potkamer, military secretary of the department of Prussia. There was gossip at the time regarding the terms of the "settlement" demanded by the parents of the count before they would consent to the nuptials. The father of Miss Parsons, it may not be indelicate to say, was a man of considerable wealth, and was difficult to manage in the transaction. Affairs seemed to be so far arranged that the date for the marriage was appointed, when it was found that the count could not obtain a leave of absence to come to America. Miss Josie, therefore, proceeded to Germany but a few months ago and joined her lover. Her wedded life ended with the birth of a child. The friends of the countess in this country had every reason to believe that her wedded life had been one of happiness. The cable dispatches containing her death reached friends in New York city who were anxiously awaiting intelligence, knowing her critical condition. The mother and sisters, who are in Michigan at present, have this affliction added to that of the distressing death of the father by his own act only a few months ago.

A Word to the Damsels.

Damsels who have the intention of making themselves conspicuous through grief should never fail to study the becomingness of the toilet. A nice-looking girl in a Jersey and black skirt, a neat little linen collar, trim boots, and ample tan colored gloves falling on the wrists in folds, may weep a little behind her fluttering handkerchief and be the more attractive, especially when her hair and hat are becomingly arranged. Fine ladyism, in the incipiency of steamer voyages, decided that good taste demanded entire seclusion from the damaging contact of mixed society during the days to be passed at sea. But whatever pretentions may be made to the contrary, exclusiveness is apt to be something of a bore to Americans of both sexes. Men never attempt it, and women on whom the motto of noblesse oblige has been carefully impressed, oftentimes look with longing eyes from behind their narrow prison bars at the kaleidoscopic view of the world beyond, and inwardly decide that the play is not worth the candle—especially as there is no one present to admire and applaud.

Fun for the Girls.

Ladies, a piece of advice—never send your letters by male.

Burlesque actresses are not always drinking people, but they have to get on their tights every night.

Seeing a carriage full of belles and beaux drive by, Aminadab remarked that that reminded him of a load of wooed.

Paradoxical as it may seem, a married man in the theatrical world is often compelled to support another man's wife.

Now that black stockings for females are in fashion, married men find it difficult to keep filled the inkstands that they have at home.

Mme. Minck, a leader of the Paris communists, has named her son Lucifer Satan Minck. The madame evidently intends to raise the devil.

We have frequently heard of "an elephant on a man's hands," but fashion decrees that Jumbo should not appear on a woman's head. J. is a bonnet.

Notice in a Hoboken ferry-boat: "The seats in this cabin are reserved for ladies. Gentlemen are requested not to occupy them until the ladies are seated."

"My dear," said a fond wife, "when we were engaged I always slept with your last letter under my pillow." "And I," murmured her husband, "I often went to sleep over your letters."

A solution: Visitor (frequent, scientific young man, who was now trying to explain the philosophy of positivism)—"I admit the question is abstruse and complic—" She—"Why not 'pop' it?"

"Where is the girl of long ago?" sings Joaquin Miller. We saw her the other day, Joaq. But she isn't a girl any more. She had gray hair and a wart on her nose, had no teeth and wore specs.

A young lady, on leaving a concert recently, expressed her delight with the excellent music, and said she was particularly pleased with "that piece from the Twelfth Massachussetts," meaning Mozart's "Twelfth Mass."

A fashion paper says: "Nothing but coral necklaces can be seen upon society belles this season." Is there not some mistake about this? Why, such a scanty costume would—oh, heavens! There must be an error in the report.

The child, after the manner of its kind, having misbehaved at table, his father administers a severe rap on the knuckles. "I say," said the youngster to his mother, "you might tell your husband there to take his hands off me."

"Is Mr. Samuelson in?" asked Mrs. Beezumbee of the servant of the house of the former on Austin avenue. "No, mum; she tole me herself to tole you she wasn't in." "That's very kind in her. Please tell Mrs. Samuelson that I didn't call this afternoon."

AMERICAN FABLES.

A Lion who had long reigned with supreme power over the forest, one day called a convention of all the beasts and announced his intention of abdicating.

"I am growing old and feeble, and I must soon pass away," he argued. "All things considered it is better that my successor be nominated and installed while I am living to give him the benefits of my experience and advice."

There was general joy among the Beasts, for the Lion had lorded it after his own fashion. The Elephant was squinting around, the Rhinoceros was pushing his nose into the crowd, and the Giraffe was doing a heap of thinking way down his throat, when the Lion continued:

"After serious reflection and solemn consideration I have decided that my own son shall succeed me. The office will not only be kept in the family, but the family will be kept in office. There being no further business before the meeting we will adjourn."

"But why the need of this convention?" protested the Rhinosceros.

"Well, there wasn't any particular need of it," replied the Lion, "but it is customary to call one in order to collect the expenses of nomination. Brother Giraffe, pass the hat!"

MORAL:

"Attend the primaries!"

A Wolf had the misfortune to break his leg, and being unable to hunt for his food, was soon reduced to the verge of starvation. One day as he was uttering lamentation a Hare came along and enquired the trouble.

"I am almost at the point of death," was the reply. "I haven't had a morsel to eat for days."

"Indeed!" exclaimed the Hare. "I'll go at once to the Hyena about it."

When the Hyena was consulted he stroked his chin reflectively and finally said:

"Are you certain that he is a Wolf of good morals?"

"No.

"Well, then, I'd better see the Lion about it before we do anything."

The Lion heard the story, winked in a wise way, and remarked:

"There ought to be a committee appointed to investigate his character. "I'll see the Stork and mention the matter."

The Stork was informed that a Wolf lay dying of starvation, and she replied:

"Well, well, but that's bad. I'll see the Ox this very afternoon, and have him decide whether we ought to send in tracts or chicken broth."

The Ox was duly informed and next day he walked over to see what should be done in the case. Arriving at the lair he found the Wolf dead, and the Owl had already been there and written on the rocks the

MORAL:

"Philanthropy is a thin tonic for an empty stomach."

American pork can not go into Germany, for Bismarck still keeps up his "watch on the rind."

Mr. Benjamin, the great Southerner, who has been such a success at the London bar, was lately offered a fee of two thousand guineas in a Canadian appeal case, and had to refuse it on the ground of poor health. Let no one say that all this is simply good luck. Good luck has had very little to do with Benjamin's success. It has been indomitable energy, brilliant abilities, and untiring perseverance. We do not like to depreciate any kind of success by attributing it to luck. Individual circumstances may be favorable, but the commanding will and the unquestionable ability have to be there also before such a man as Benjamin can achieve what he has done.

Robinson Crusoe's Island To-Day.

The sun was bathing the beautiful island with a flood of golden light as we neared its picturesque harbor. In little boats we went ashore, and landed in the primitive manner of running the boat aground and pulling the boat up on the shore. It was difficult to realize that we were, indeed, on the historical, mysterious island that imagination had pictured from childhood's early hours in so many fanciful forms. The books tell you that it was on this lovely island that in 1704, the celebrated English navigator, Dampier, landed his coxswain, Alexander Selkirk, with whom he had quarreled, and left him alone on this uninhabited spot with a small quantity of provisions and tools. Here he lived four years, till he was picked up by a passing ship, and brought back to Europe. It was from the notes he made during his solitary residence that Daniel Defoe composed his incomparable work of "Robinson Crusoe." No book, doubtless, ever held the childish interest with greater fascination than that which describes his wanderings on this mysterious and enchanted island. That which had always seemed but a dreamy romance was now before you. The scenes where all the wild and wondrous experiences were described are just at hand, and you wander on, as it were, but just aroused from a fanciful dream. Perchance it was on this sandy beach along which you wander that Crusoe first discovered the footsteps of his good man Friday.

The island is about seven Spanish leagues in circumference, or a trifle over twenty English miles. It belongs to Chili, and for a number of years the government used it as a place for transporting convicts, till one night all the prisoners arose in their power, killed their keepers; and taking the only boats on the island sailed away and were never heard of more. Of late years the government has leased the island to one man who pays something like $2,000 a year for its use. This man has a small colony of workmen whom he employs in cutting timber, drying fish and goat skins and sending them every few months to the market at Valparaiso.—Rochester Democrat.

Sea Bathing at Monterey, Mexico.

The surf rolls in invitingly along the shining sands along the blue, blue bay of Monterey, but no one accustomed to the torrid shore and the tepid waves of the New Jersey coast would dream of a dip in the Pacific at any season. The air and the water are decidedly too cool for comfortable surf bathing, and the trade winds are rather more than the noonday sun can subdue. To overcome this a large bath-house has been built on the beach, in which there are four large tanks filled with sea water, heated to different temperatures. The tanks each measured thirty-six feet in width by fifty feet in length, and the depth ranges from three to six feet. Beginning with the cold water as it is pumped from the ocean, each tank holds water of a different temperature, ranging from tepid to warm. The ladies have a separate tank, but the fun and interest of the bathing house centers around the three great tanks in the main hall. The pools are surrounded with tropical plants and trees, vines creep up the wall, and with a glass roof and many windows the place is bright and sunny. The amphibious folk parade up and down the sides of the tanks in their bathing suits and dip themselves first into one pool and then into another. The children scurry and plunge about like so many frogs, and faint screams are heard from over the partition, where the modest women are taking their warm swim.—Correspondence St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Sabbath Desecration.

The leading ministers of Toronto nearly all took occasion recently to denounce from their respective pulpits the new departure of the Government in regard to Sunday mails, and the increased Sunday service by the railroads. It is to be hoped they may be successful in bringing enough moral influence to bear to stop the practice again, but it is sceptical on that point. Governments the world over seem more easily influenced by monetary than by moral considerations, and it may turn out so in this case. It is to be hoped that opposition to the new state of things will not die out after the first vigorous protests have been made. A good deal of perseverance of the saints would be commendable here, and if the present outcry of opposition should prove successful, a similar attempt may not be made again in a long time. Where or when the pressure was brought to bear on the Government to order the new state of things has not yet been made public. It must have been well known that the moral sense of the religious part of the community would be a good deal shocked, and the authorities, no doubt, resolved to count the cost before the important step was decided on.

One thing is quite certain, the amount of postal business to be transacted will not be much increased; it will be more generally spread over the entire seven days of the week than in the six actual business days as before; and possibly the demands will not be quite as great on the telegraph wires as formerly, in consequence. Already we notice there is a protest on the part of the Hamilton Post Office employees against increased days of service without increased pay, and probably a great many other employees will be heard from soon.

The laboring men, both on railways and in Government offices, may well guard jealously any innovation on their Sunday rest, for they may depend, in the end there will be but the ordinary six days pay for ordinary seven days work.

Canada is now one of the best Sunday observing countries in the world, and it is evident that if our Day of Rest is to be kept sacred to all classes eternal vigilance will be necessary on the part of the ministers and the whole religious portion of the community.

Dr. C. I. Wills says, in his "Modern Persia": "A peculiarity of of the Shirazi is his fondness for repeating words, changing the initial of the second. Use is second nature, and a curious instance of the habit is narrated of the late Kawam-u-Dowlet. When in the presence of the shah, the Kawam-u-Dowlet was asked by his majesty: 'Why is it, Kawam, that you Shirazis always talk of kabob-mabob, and so on? You always add a nonsense word; is it for eupohny?' 'O, asylum of the universe, may I be your sacrifice; no respectable person in Shiraz does so; only the luti-puti says it.' Luti, as here used, means a blackguard, and puti is, of course, a 'nonsense' (or meaningless) word."

In the cure of severe coughs, weak lungs, spitting of blood, and the early stages of Consumption, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has astonished the medical faculty. While it cures the severest coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood. By druggists.

"What kind of fruit is that over there?" asked a man as he saw a crowd of boys planting a dead canine. "Nothing but a dog-bury," was the reply.

Truth Is Mighty.

When Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., announced that his "Favorite Prescription" would positively cure the many diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, some doubted, and continued to employ the harsh and caustic local treatment. But the mighty truth gradually became acknowledged. Thousands of ladies employed the "Favorite Prescription" and were speedily cured. By druggists.

A bore, meeting Douglass Jerrold, said: "Well, what's going on to-day?" "I am," exclaimed Jerrold, darting past the inquirer.

Somebody's Child.

Somebody's child is dying—dying with the flush of hope on his young face, and somebody's mother thinking of the time when that dear face will be hidden where no ray of hope can brighten it—because there was no cure for consumption. Reader, if the child be your neighbor's, take this comforting word to the mother's heart before it is too late. Tell her that consumption, is curable; that men are living to-day whom the physicians pronounced incurable, because one lung had been almost destroyed by the disease. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has cured hundreds; surpassed cod liver oil, hypophosphites, and other medicines in curing this disease. Sold by druggists.

Rural Scenery—Gent from city: "But where the duce is the scenery? What in thunder is there to look at?" Farmer (indignantly): "Why, the new barn. What more do you want for $5 a week? It's a perfect beauty."

Nothing known to medical science can surpass the healing properties of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry in Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Colic and all Bowel Complaints. (8)

Blobson calls accompaniments "bald-headed music"—because they haven't got any air.

If you would escape the ravages of that scourge of the Summer season, Cholera Morbus, keep Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry at hand for use. In that and all other forms of Bowel Complaint, it is infallible. (9)

Now comes from the far West another illustration of the eternal fitness of things. Calico, a town on the Pacific coast, has a newspaper called The Print.

Reader, if you suffer from any disorder of the Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidney, Skin or Blood, try Burdock Blood Bitters, Nature's specific medicine for acting on those organs for the outlet of disease. 25,000 bottles sold in the last three months. (10)

The coalman's cart broke down as he was going to weigh the coal. "You needn't fuss to weigh that coal," said the man who had purchased it. "If it's heavy enough to break down the cart it weighs more than any ton of coal I ever got before. I'm satisfied."

"Leaves have their time to fall." says the poet, but Wild Strawberry leaves are on the rise just now, being utilized in such enormous quantities in making Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—the infallible remedy for Cholera Morbus, Diarrhœa and other Summer Complaints. (11)

A young carpenter wants to know "what is a joggle-piece?" Why don't you read your dictionary? Webster says a joggle-piece "is a truss post whose shoulders and sockets receive the lower ends of the struts. Good gracious, we thought everybody knew what a joggle-piece is.

Do not delay, if suffering any form of Bowel Complaint, however mild apparently may be the attack, but use Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. The feeling of indignation against the French for their conduct in Madagascar is rapidly rising in England. Indeed, it is said never to have been so keen since the battle of Waterloo. Stranger things have happened than its issuing, some of these days, in blows.

Nobody Cares.

Why grumble at every little thing? Nobody cares to know anything about it. If you have toothache get the dentist to remove it. Don't increase your misery and try to make others unhappy by talking about it. How stupid a subject of conversation is an aching corn or two. Can you expect sympathy? Every person knows that PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR removes them without pain in a few days. Then the proper thing is to invest in a bottle, get it at the corns, and the thing is done. Be sure you get Putnam's, for there are others offered as substitutes for the genuine.

Love in the Depot.

A woman arrived here the other forenoon from the east with seven children in tow, and at almost the same hour a man reached the same depot from the North with five offspring of various ages and sizes. She was a widow and he a widower, and the children had not been whipped more than once around before there was a sort of mutual sympathy that begot admiration and then friendship. One of the widow's boys offered one of the widower's girls a bit of fried cake, which was accepted in the spirit tendered, and a 10-year old girl belonging to the man made up to the 2-year old belonging to the woman and soon secured the privilege of wiping its nose and combing its hair. Presently the widower made bold to inquire:

"Madam, am I wrong in believing that you are a widow."

"I have been a widow fourteen months today," she answered.

"Great Scots! but it's just fourteen months to-day since my Hanner died! Which way be you going?"

"To Illanoy."

"That's just where I am going, too. Did you promise your husband never to marry again?"

"No."

"And I didn't promise my wife, either. Fact is, I believe I shall unite as soon as I find some good woman."

"And my children need a father's care," she sighed as she pulled little John Henry off the window sill and bumped him into a seat.

The man got up and waiked around the waiting-room and took a closer look at the children. Then he returned and said:

"I suppose you've got a few hundred dollars, belong to some church, can wash and bake and mend, and are of a mild and forgiving disposition?"

"Yes, that's me."

"Well, I'm kinder religious, even-tempered and am worth about $2,000. I'm sort o' struck on you. There's something about your eyes that reminds me of Hanner."

"And you look like Alonzo around the mouth," she sighed.

Then he bent over and whispered something about Chicago and getting married, and she nodded her head. He gathered his children under his wing, took them into a corner, and solemnly and impressively observed:

"Children, I'm going to get married to that woman over there and give you a new mother,. If any of you is going to kick and boo-hoo about it, begin now, so that I can tune ye down before the train goes. Henry, you are the oldest. Are you going to declare yon'll run away or commit suicide? Let me know right now, for this is a good cool place to prance ye around with a shingle."

Henry said he guessed it would be all right, and the rest of the crowd seemed to agree, and ten minutes later the widower and widow sat holding hands and trying to eat peanuts, and the twelve children were biting and pulling hair and kicking to see who would have a seat on the steam-heater.

"This is kinder the work of heaven!" chuckled the widower as he hitched a little nearer.

"You bet, love!" she replied, as she shucked another peanut with her tee'h.—Detroit Free Press.

He Won.

A lot of old chaps were sitting around the other evening telling stories and one bet the treats he could tell the biggest lie. The crowd got ready and the first man led off.

"It happened this way boys," said he, "away out West. In those days I was a gentleman, and—"

"Hold on," interrupted the entire gang, "that's enough. We'll pay for the drinks. What'll you take?"

And it was so.— Cincinnati Merchantand Traveler.

A lady in California used to take walks with a very handsome girl at the Sacramento Insane Asylum. Snddenly the girl would leavd her companion with the remark: "I must go now; my spell is coming on." She was really two beings, now sensible, modecr, amable; suddenly, by some wonderful process, she was transformed to a writhing, contorted lunatic. She always knew when the change was approaching, and retired to her room until the paroxysm had passed. When the lady was taking leave of the asylum, this little friend shook hands with tears in her eyes. "If you think of me at all," she said, "only remember me as we walked together—friends and happy. Please don't, don't think of meas that other girl, raving and crazy."

PETER'S LUCK.

The Reminiscences of Unvarying Good Fortune Narrated by an Old Marketman.

"He won thirty pounds on naming thirteen for the pilot boat that met the Arizona, did he?" said an old Washington Market butcher, meditatively dropping the edge of his cleaver on the block. "Win it on thirteen! the onluckiest of all born numbers! Then there's little doubt in my mind that that H. C. Peters is the same Peters that used to be around the market a few years ago. Not the same Peters that Poucher bought out, over in West Washington. He was George. No, not that Peters, but another Peters. I don't know rightly what he did; sort of a silent partner of somebody, I guess. He was hanging about most of the time, and all the the boys used to say he had more luck 'n a mule could draw. It was his luck that saved him the time the Westfield blew up. He was going aboard of her, and a man stopped him to pay him some money; a mighty good reason for stopping that was, too, and he let the boat go. Just Peter's luck. When the rest of them that would have been his fellow passengers were sailing around in the air he was taking his beer quite comfortably ashore. A man without any luck would have run to catch that boat; a man of reasonably good luck might have been stopped of going aboard by somebody striking him for a V just at the last minute, but it was all-fired big luck to be stopped by a man who wanted to pay money to him.

"Oh, yes. This must be the same Peters. There isn't enough of that sort of luck to stock two in the same family. One slushy spring day he was going down through Central Row in a hurry, when his feet shot out from under him and he came down with a flop, and went kiting along a step or two, clutching handsful of sawdust as he went. His hat flew off, of course, among the feet of a crowd, but his luck protected it and nobody stepped on it. More yet. He felt a bit of paper among the sawdust in his hand and sort of shook it out. It was a five-dollar note. That was worth sitting down in a hurry for.

"Lucky! Why I mind his telling me one time of his leasing a house up town, or going to lease it, which was the same thing, for he was going in the morning to the agent to sign the lease, when he learned that it was burned down the night before. Within two weeks after a friend told him that he had lived in that house, and it had some kind of a disease in it, from bad sewer pipes or something of the sort, that had killed one of his children. Peters wouldn't loose any children by anything of the sort. He had too much luck. How his luck was in business I don't know, for, as I told you, I didn't know much about his business, but it must have been good, for he was always flush, and he never appeared to worry or take on about anything. I remember the answer he gave once to a chap that was trying to get him to insure his life. 'No, says he, 'it might confuse my luck.' He meant, you know, that it would be luck for him to get the insurance money by dying, and luck too to live, even if he had to go on paying premiums, and as there was a chance for a split he wouldn't play on that turn for fear it might go the wrong way. He would bet to back an opinion, and when he did he'd win. He seemed content without pressing his luck. It seems to me that if I'd had Peters's luck I'd have had more money than Vanderbilt in a year, but he didn't aspire to be a high roller."

WHEN TELEGRAPHY WAS NEW.

How the Emperor of Austria Looked at the Thing and Waltzed Away.

A Washington letter says: Soon after the patents were issued to Morse, and their adoption and use settled as a certainty, a scheme was got up to send over persons to introduce the system in Europe. Among the diplomatic corps representing the empire of Austria in Washington, a young man named L. C. Fleshman was selected, and an outfit of instruments, wires, and batteries paepared and given to him. In due time Fleshman turned up in the court of Ferdinand I., emperor of Austria, and arranged for a time when royalty would condescend to look at the American invention. The day was set. Dukes, counts, and barons were assembled. The master of ceremonies was to give the word when the experiments should begin. No signal was given, and the telegraph man began to be uneasy. They were waiting for the emperor. At last a stir was noticed, room made, and to the surprise of the operator there danced into the room a slight figure clad in a loose-fitting short gray coat. His hair stood straight up. He wore some kind of low slippers, and with his hands behind his back skipped into the room humming something like a fisher's horn-pipe, to which he was stepping time. This was the emperor of Austria. As he approached the stand upon which the telegraph instrument was placed, his idiotic looks were revealed. He skipped up to the table, bent over until his nose nearly touched the instrument, said: "Ah, very fine, very fine," and turning quickly waltzed out without giving Fleshman time to say one word in reference to the matter.

The royal gathering looked at one another with knowing glances, and many of them seemed quite confused. After this mockery of power had left, Prince Metternich, the soldier and statesman, who was considered to be the shrewdest politician in Europe from the beginning of the present century up to the time of his death in 1848, approached the young electrician, in company with the Archduke John, and asked many questions as to its utility and practice. The Archduke John was at that time "intermistic rules" of Germany (that is, a referee in disputes between the different German states during a period when there was no emperor). The Archduke John cared very little for the claims of royalty. They were nothing to him, unless coupled with deserving. He had married the daughter of a postmaster in Tyrol, and brought his mountain beauty home in the face of the protests of all his royal relations. This experience, as may well be guessed with a man so self-willed, rather increased his natural desire to advance real merit, and Prince Metternish and himself that evening assembled the general staff of the Austrian army at the Academy of Sciences in Vienna, and had the young electrician lecture on and explain the Morse system of telegraphing before them. The result was an experimental line erected for army signals, and its general use speedily following.

CHINESE AT CHURCH.

The Curious Company of Little and Big Pig-Tails, Male and Female, Singing Moody's Hymns.

A San Francisco letter says: One other experience among the Chinese must close this letter. "Would you like to come with us to one of the Chinese mission schools, Sunday, afternoon, and hear the scholars sing?" asked some friends with missionary proclivities. We answered eagerly that we should. The appointed time found us entering a good-looking church, a tablet on the front of which informed the stranger that this was the "First Chinese Presbyterian Church." We were taken into a large Sunday-school room, where sat a crowd of almond-eyed fellow-creatures, varying in age from the boy to the elderly man. We had expected only to "assist" in the French sense of the word, by being present at the exercises. But there were not teachers enough to go round, and we were at once pounced upon by the missionary and installed each of us over a class, mauger our remonstrances, "All you have to do," he said, "is to hear them read and correct them when they mispronounce." We entered upon our unaccustomed task with fear and trembling, but soon grew interested in our gentle, attentive pupils. They read from premiers full of easy sentences: "Shoes are made of leather," "I took a drink to quench my thirst," etc. Now and then there was a sentence containing a sly moral lesson: "A boy drank some whiskey and it made him sick," and occasionally one a distinctly theological turn was sandwiched in. Very patiently the scholars struggled to pronounce the unfamiliar words. The Chinese language is made up of a few simple sounds. That is why the Chinese find it so hard to learn English. They not only have to memorize new words. but have to learn to make wholly new sounds as well. On the other hand, the Russian language includes almost all the sounds which the human voice is capable of producing. Therefore, the Russians are excellent linguists. Whatever language they study, they do not need to practice any new sounds, but only to combine the old ones into new words. At least, so we are told.

When the lesson was over, all stood up and recited the Lord's prayer, and we adjourned to the church. Here we were joined by the feminine members of the Sunday school, demure, modest-looking Chinese girls, marching two by two. They wore loose trousers any bright-colored tunics. Their hair was brushed back "slick" over the tops of their heads, and banged behind; that is, a row of bangs ran across the backs of their necks from one ear to the other, under their heavy, magnificent pig-tails. These poor little daughters of China had hair that many a belle might envy. They had fine eyes, too, and looked docile and intelligent. The Chinese women are said to be very inferior mentally to the women of other eastern countries. Perhaps it is not due to the lack of natural capacity, but rather to the fact that the obstinate conservative of their nation gives them no chance.

The religious service which followed was the most extraordinary we had ever witnessed. The scholars sang in Chinese, and the missionary preached and prayed in the same language. It was ludicrous in one aspect to see a gray-haired man stand up in a pulpit and utter a series of fiendish noises like those to which riotous children sometimes give vent—barking, mewing, and cackling, interspersed with an occasional long melancholy howl. It was something between the intoning of a high-church service and the vocal efforts of a herd of pigs. The responsive reading of a psalm was even funnier. First the minister barked; then the congregation, wild and shrill, yelped in chorus. When a hymn was to be sung, a chart on which it was printed in Chinese characters was unrolled before the congregation, and each word was pointed off as it was sung. The boys sang "Sweet Hour of Prayer," in Chinese, keeping good time and tune. Then the girls and women sang a plaintive Moody and Sankey air very prettily. The organist was a plump, moon-faced Chinaman, who fanned himself placidly with a silver fan while he stood up reciting the Apostles' creed in English with the rest of the congregation. Their English was so peculiar that I thought they were talking Chinese till the unmistakable words, "Virgin Mary," put me on the track.

How Ideas Come.

A certain lawyer justified his pet hobby, which is carpenter work, not merely by the healthy relaxation of nervous tensions and exercise of muscle it brings him, but chiefly because he works out his legal problems, plane in hand. Old law reading comes back to him then, out of the way precedents recur to mind, the very text of the law book is never so clearly before him as then. He has the glimpse of the volume and the page, and the very part of the page on which is some needed citation which he would otherwise have longed to seek.

Nor is it only memory which works when he is half engrossed with the affairs of his handicarft. Original thoughts arise and ingenious devices; clever combinations take shape of themselves. The case works itself out, and mental labor is only pleasurable exertion, just as his amateur handwork is. Hawthorne composed walking. Musicians are seized with ideas, and modern playwrights seize upon others' ideas, at the most unexpected moments. Business men have been known to depend upon their meditation at dead of night for sound review of the present, and forecast on which they base their plans. When we are hurried, we long for rest, to "think over things" and decide rationally; but, relived from pressure, we "think of nothing at all." Comes the moment for action, we settle in three seconds the confusion of day, and, for good or ill results, our plans are at least clear. What is needed is not time nor will, but rather the favorable moment when there is harmony. Then, like the electric message, thought is swift and sure. The idea which we have long waited for arrives, not as the certain result of earnest thought, but as the reward of thought, just as honorable fame is the reward of noble deeds, but not the certain result of them.—Boston Courier.

John Barnett, the first railroad conductor ever employed in passenger traffic, died lately in England. He accompanied the old No. 1 engine in its trial trip with George Stephenson.

PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.

The Tendency of Scientific Inquiry.

Sir Henry Barkly G. C. M. G., F. R. S., took the chair at the annual meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute, at 7 Adelphi Terrace, London, in the last week in June. Honorary Secretary, Captain F. Petrie, F. R. S. L., read the report, by which it appeared that the Institute,—founded to investigate all questions of Philosophy and Science, and more especially any alleged to militate against the truth of Rev elation,—had now risen to 1,020 members, of whom about one-third were Foreign Colonial, and American, and new applications to join were constantly coming in. An increasing number of leading men of Science had joined its ranks, and men of Science, whether in its ranks or not, co-operated in its work. During the session a careful analysis had been undertaken by Professor Stokes, F. R. S., Sir J. R. Bennett, Vice-Pres. R. S., Professor Beale, F. R. S., and others, of the various theories of Evolution, and it was reported that, as yet, no scientific evidence had been met with giving countenance to the theory that man had been evolved from a lower order in animals; and Professor Virchow had declared that there was a couple absence of any fossil type of a lower stage in the development of man; and that any positive advance in the province of prehistoric anthropology has actually removed us further from proofs of such connection,—namely, with the rest of the Animal kingdom. In this, Professor Barrande, the great palæontologist, had concurred, declaring that in none of his investigations had he found any one fossil species develop into another. In fact, it would seem that no scientific man had yet discovered a link between man and the ape, between fish and frog, or between the vertebrate and invertebrate animals; further, there was no evidence of any one species, fossil or other, losing its peculiar characteristics to acquire new ones belonging to other species; for instance, however similar the dog to the wolf, there was no connecting link, and among extinct species the same was the case; there was no gradual passage from one to another. Moreover, the first animals that existed on the earth were by no means to be considered as inferior or degraded. Among other investigations, one into the truth of the argument from Design in Nature had been carried on, and had hitherto tended to fully confirm that doctrine. The question of the Assyrian inscriptions and the recent Babylonian researches had been under the leadership of Mr. Hormuzd Rassam, who, on his arrival from Nineveh, had given a full report of the extent of his new excavations, which were of the highest interest. His discovery at Sepharvaim, one of the first cities mentioned in Holy Writ, was most important. Professor Delitsch and others aided in the consideration of the discoveries and the inscriptions found. Two meetings had been held to consider the questions raised in Mr. Herbert Spencer's Philosophy, and Lord O'Neill and others had shown, by a careful analysis of his arguments, that a greater attention to accuracy in statement would have kept Mr. Spencer from arriving at those hasty conclusions which had made his philosophy remarkable. It was announced that the results of explorations now being carried on in Egypt would be laid before the Institute early in the winter. The discoveries were very important, especially that of the city of Succoth, which, like the results of the survey of Palestine, was confirmatory of the Sacred Record. The quarterly Journal, which had been published for sixteen years, was now issued free to all Members and Associates, whether at home or abroad. Several interesting speeches having been made, the Members and their friends adjourned to the Museum, where refreshments were served.

A SABBATH DAY ROMANCE.

Strange Meeting of a Divorced Wife with Her Husband and the Lover of Her Youth.

The Atlantic City Review relates as an actual occurrence at that bathing resort the meeting of three persons who had been intimately connected in their former lives, ending in the marriage of two long-parted lovers. The heroine, Mary B. Donoghue, ten years ago, when only 16 years of age, was the belle of Virginia village. While at the White Sulpher Springs, five years ago, she was persuaded by her mother to marry a young Austrian, named Frascati, whose debts and dissipations had driven him from home to America. Two years ago her only child died, and a divorce procured her a release from the cruelty of a brutal husband. Since then she had seen neither her husband whom she never loved, nor the lover who had fled the country on her ill-fated marriage. Among the throng on Sunday gazing out upon the ocean from the porch of the New Inlet house, by a strange irony, were the two men—Frascati, the Austrian drunkard, the divorced husband, on one side of his former wife; John Saunders, the lover who had grown sick with longing for a face now not twenty feet away—yet each unconscious of the others presence. Driven, no doubt, to despair by remorse and penury, Frascati wandered away along the shore. When he plunged in he did not know whether he could swim out, or whether he would drown his sorrows once for all, and find a grave beneath the waves. But a woman's startled shriek rang shrilly out over the evening air; his own wife had seen his wild leap, all ignorant that this was the man who had wrecked a young life Her accents touched a chord no other voice had ever waked in Saunder's heart. He rushed toward the spot from which it seemed to come, and dragged Frascati dripping from the water. A mutual and triangular recognition followed, and there, in the presence of the man who had always loved her, Mary Donoghue's divorced husband knelt and prayed her forgiveness. At the quiet marriage which took place the same evening in the house of an Atlantic City clergyman, Saunders' was joined for life to the woman he had always loved. Frascati witnessed the ceremony, but how was the minister to know that the divorced and erring husband thus ratified the marriage of his own former wife to the man who had saved his life? How stranger after all is truth than fiction; how true it is that all things come to those who wait.

MARKDALE, JULY 26TH, 1883.

PROFANE LANGUAGE.

This vulgar, ungentlemanly, demoralizing practice or habit is indulged in to an alarming extent; perhaps more so than respectable people generally are fully aware of. There are few things more disgusting than to hear a torrent of oaths from the lips of a grown-up person, but it is infinitely more abominable when they are made use of by boys, and even young children, as is too often the case. It is, we think, the most senseless habit that can be formed. We say habit because it is not natural, but, like any other habit, when cultivated and practised, it becomes second nature, and is as difficult to overcome as perhaps any other evil habit. Those who indulge in any lust of the body, such as the use of intoxicating liquor, tobacco, opium, &c., expect some return, but the swearer degrades himself without either hope or prospect of deriving any pleasure therefrom. The question naturally arrises, how can the evil be remedied, when those who would have us believe they are civilized, and even force their way into respectible society, have no respect for themselves or their Maker then we say our statutes should provide a punishment for breaking the 3rd commandment equal to that of disobeying the 6th, the observance of which are equally binding in the word of God.

NOT JUST SQUARE.

We have a large number of patrons who pay their subscriptions prompt in advance, which is a credit to themselves and a pleasure to us, yet there are quite a number who allow the whole year (and in some cases several years) to pass and then expect us to accept the cash in advance rates. now we do not consider it just square to do so, and besides it would be encouraging them to continue in the same course in future. Injustice to ourselves and of our prompt paying subscribers, we will in future charge twenty five cents per year extra on all subscriptions allowed to run three months or over. This has been our terms from the first and we will put them in force for the time to come.

SOIREE AT TOWNSEND'S LAKE.

On Friday evening last a Soiree was held in the Primitive Methodist Church, at Townsend's Lake, Glenelg. This little lake covers about 200 acres, and the land around it is equal to any part of the Township, and at this season of the year the locality is one of the finest views to be obtained. The Soiree was a little late in commencing but was quite pleasant and social. The tea and provisions were of the choisest kind, dealt out liberally. After tea the Rev. Mr Corcoran, of Markdale pastor of the Circuit, was appointed Chairman, and after a brief address, proceeded to carry out the progromme in a pleasant manner, interspersing the pieces with witty and humerous remarks. An excellent Choir gave a number of pieces in a fine style at intervals, Mrs. J. Townsend, of Durham sang a solo. An address was given by J. Townsend of the Review. Miss Trevarrow of Markdale, gave an excellent recitation, followed by a solo from Miss Rorke, of Markdale. Mr. John Ritchie, teacher, gave a good address on appearing in a true and natural manner. A quartette—Misses Townsend, Bella MacRae, and two others, was well rendered, followed by recitations by Miss Jennet Bell and Miss Trevarrow, the latter being loudly applauded and answered by giving another recitation. F. MacRae, Esq., Reeve of Glenelg, was then called upon and gave a humerous but good address, followed by a song by Miss Bella MacRae. The Rev. Mr. Boyle, student of Knox College gave a good address on social intercourse, and was followed by a solo from Miss Rorke. Votes of thanks were tendered to the speakers, to the choir and others who assisted in the entertainment, to the ladies for providing for the soiree, and to the Choir. The proceeds amounted to $23.-25. and will be devoted towards putting seats in the Church, a very worthy object.—Grey Review.

A CLEVER WOMAN.

HOW HANDY IT IS TO HAVE A CLEVER PAIR OF FEET WHEN YOU WANT THEM.

We were reading in an exchange the other day of the marriage of a woman in England who was born without arms, but who can use her toes with remarkable dextarity. She can sew, knit, crochet, use a knife and fork scratch her head with her toes with as much ease as a more fortunate mortals can with their fingures.

After reading the article we leaned back, closed our eyes and allowed our thought to go off on an excursion across the water. We followed that girl from the day when she first snared a bean until her marriage, and some of the mental pictures were queer ones. When her lover would call, of course, she must receive as other ladies would and just imagine how od it would be to see her reaching up her foot, taking his hat between her toes placing it upon the table and motioning him to a seat. She would sit by his side talking all the little nonsensical nothings that lovers usually talk, over and anon slapping him lovingly on the cheek with the sole of her foot when he would get off some joke at her expense. She spies a hair on his collar, and with a dexterity closely bordering on the marvelous, reaching up with witching grace, takes it in her toes and casts it away. We can see her sitting there with her foot in his hand responding to his tender squiezes, or coyly toying with his whiskers with her taper toes. Mayhap he may hint that he doubts her constantancy, when with an injured look upon her fair face she puts her foot on her heart and assures him it beats only for him. that at every pulsation the bounding blood murmurs his beloved name. Then he smiles takes the lovely foot in his hand, kissing it fondly and assures her that he was but jesting and that he would as soon doubt the purity of a babe as to doubt her love. If his necktie became unloosened how gracefully she would tie it with both feet, tapping the tie neatly down with a big toe when the job was completed. We can picture her screaming with laughter and clapping her feet in glee over some funny story, or wiping away an unbidden tear with her toes at a rectial of want and suffering. When about to part he would kiss her and ask her for one loving embrace, he would have to do all the embracing himself. She would hand him his hat escort him to the door, give him s good-night shake of the foot and then sit down and draw a beautiful picture of the day when he would fall upon his knees and ask her for her foot and heart. Then she would retire to her chamber, undress, sit down or bury he face in he feet and say her prayers as all good girls should and go to bed to dream of a future frescoed with bliss and dadoed with supreme happiness.

And the marriage ceremony! Of course the bride could not enter leaning upon the arm of the groom as is customary, for it would be rather unique to see her hopping in on one foot. They approach the altar and the ceremony begins. Where right hands are usually joined she must give him her right foot, and at the words "with this ring I thee wed," the peculiar circumstance of the case would compel him to place the golden band of love upon one of her toes. Of course it would tickle her and she might flinch and wiggle her pearly toes, but this need cause no serious hitch in the proceedings. After the ceremony friends would crowd up and shake her foot and rain blessings and kind wishes upon her head, and under propitious skies would set forth together upon the journey of life, foot in hand, and if the union should be blessed with children how exhilirating it would be to see her whip an obstinate youngster, She would snatch him up with her toes whack the daylights out of him with the sole of her foot. Then she would release him, shake her toe at him sternly and tell him that if he disobeys her again she will make him think he has been sitting on a hot stove lid. As to kneading dough for the morning biscuits—well, we will drop the curtain of curiosity and pursue her no further. Just let your imagination take up the thread where we drop it, dear reader, and you will have a bushel of fun. imagine her doing the "grand right and left" at a ball, for instance.—Duluth Tribune.

Mr. Thomas McDougall, of Fort William, spent a few days in Markdale this week.

OBITUARY.

With melancholy feelings we are called upon this week to record the demise of Mrs. Colin McMillan, of South Line Artemesia, which sad event took place on the 12th inst. For many years she was a faithful and devoted member of the Presbyterian Church. Her death is very much regretted in the community. as she had by her christian deportment, generous hospitality, and genial disposition won the esteem and affection of all her acquaintances. Her end was peace.

PUBLIC MORALITY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

In your local column of the 19th inst. reference is made to a paltry squabble which took place "at one of our hotels." The reference is too plain to be misunderstood, for you evidently refer to a slight altercation which was caused by a number of "bullies" who came to the "Revere" on the evening of the 12th inst., and attacked a respectable citizen of the town without cause or provocation, in a most violent manner, the person attacked being in a delicate state of health. Two of those present shielded this person, and in so doing was compelled to strike one of the rude assailants two blows. This is the sum and substance of the affray and which was in no way connected with the hotel in question. I trust manhood in Markdale has not yet degenerated into childish sentimentality to permit rude rascality to trample under foot law-abiding respectability, in the person of those who have been residents of Markdale since it existed as a village. As to your expression of "excessive drinking, swearing, unseemly noises," &c., why did you not distinguish between the parties as to who were the profaners of Her Majesty's grammar. When rowdies assail we must defend.

ONE INTERESTED.

FLESHERTON STATION, July 24.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

Dear Sir,—On receiving your issue of the week before last, I was much surprised to find the notice of our Sabbath school picnic containing so many misstatements. In the first place I did not provide all those viands, (which certainly were very fine.) and as for the lady who so ably assisted at singing, I was not aware that she sang at all. The children sang, and our instrumental music was kindly provided by an amiable young lady who lives in this place but objects to having her name mentioned. This is all I wish to correct; the other statement are quite true. especially concerning Mr. Mitchell and his hobby horses. Many thanks are due to him for his kindness in providing this part of the entertainment free of charge. I feel very sorry to be obliged to write this letter, but felt it my duty to do so, thereby giving honor where honor is due. I also wish to express my thanks as a friend of the Sabbath school to the kind friends who favored us with their presence and also with their full baskets, at our picnic. Hoping we shall have many more successful picnics

I remain, yours truly,

MRS. DOUPE.

SUITABLE.—It is well worth your while to call at the Markdale Photo Gallery and see a beautiful picture just taken of Barr. Miss—it eclipses anything yet turned out. We couldn't tell whether it could be surpassed in New York.

Mr. J. G. Casson, implement agent for the Massey Works, London, is doing a rushing business in Harvest Implements and machinery this season. He had two car load of Reapers and Mowers unloaded at this station on Saturday. The Mower "New Model" is giving general satisfaction and the "Improved Harvester" needs no recommendation as it is already favourably known, can be seen at Mullarky's cooper shop.

GARDEN PARTY.—The Ladies Aid Association of Christ Church, purpose holding their annual Garden Party, in Walker's lawn, on Thursday, the 2nd August. They have secured the services of the Dundalk Brass Band for the occasion and a rich threat may be expected, all are invited. Should the weather prove unfavorable from rain provision will be made for amusements under cover.

Rev. Mr. Casson appears to exhibit greater ability in the pulpit each time, last Sunday evening he preached a masterly and very comprehensive sermon. A new church will soon be required to accommodate the increasing numbers who attend.

McFarland & Hull's stave factory commenced operations today.

Men's worsted suits $4, at McFarland's. Mens' and boys' hats at half usual price at McFarland's.

On the 5th inst., the pupils of the Manitowaning school presented their teacher, E. J. J. Ferguson, with an address accompanied by a purse, album and ink-stand. Mr. Ferguson has been re-engaged as teacher of the village school at an increased salary.—Manitoulin Expositor.

The sidewalk from the station to mill st. is now finished, the company having made a good substantial job of the same, we have now a respectable side walk complete to the station platform. The Railway Company have promptly responded to our humble requests in this matter, and judging from remarks dropped by our citizens while strolling in that vicinity, their action is highly appreciated.

A very serious want has this season been felt in Markdale for the saw mill and planing factory, which were both burned. We are assured that the latter will be rebuilt as soon as brick can be had, which will not be more than another week. There is an excellent opening for a saw mill and we sincerely hope to see one in operation before another year opens, who will take hold of it, there is money in it.

Captain Webb, the English champion, attempted to swim the rapids and whirlpool at Niagara on Tuesday, and paid for his rash venture with his life. He succeeded in passing down the rapids, buffeting the current with lusty stroke, but when he entered the whirlpool, "the hurrying billows, whose madness foams at lip," seized him, and he never rose Up to midnght the body of the captain had not been found.

GOOD STOCK.—The improvement of stock is, we might say absolutely necessary in order to assure the success of the stock farmers. In this respect Mr. Benjamin Coleman holds a prominent position in regard to both sheep and cattle, he has this season a very fine dark red Durham bull, two years old which would be hard to beat in any section of country. Farmers should discard the use of all inferior animals, when such fine animals as the above are to be had.

Markdale Lodge of Canadian Order of Odd Fellows held their quarterly meeting in their new quarters on Monday evening last. There was a good attendance and a very satisfactory meeting. The Auditors' report was read and adopted showing the amount of $136.74 on hand which is deposited in the bank and bearing interest, the auditors spoke very highly of the manner which the secretary Mr. A Turner kept the books. The Hall is spacious and neatly furnished, the centre of the room being laid with a new tapestry tarpet while the elevation of five inches high by three feet wide which surrounds the room is covered with oil carpet. Three new candidates were proposed and good prospects for more to follow.

"ROYAL LEOPARD'S" COLTS ABROAD.—A letter from Mr. A. F. DeNinny, of Grand Rapids Mich., to Mr. O. W. Smith, of Mount Forest, reveals the fact that "Royal Leopard's" colts are highly prized on the other side of the line. Mr. DeVinny says: "I have just been out through Plainfield and Belmont where "Leopard's" colts abound and I learn that they are all good ones." In speaking of a colt he has from 'Leopard," the same gentleman says: "My "Duke of Kent" was three years old the 8th day of last month. He is a very dark bay almost brown in winter, with not white hair on him. He is as fine a stepping colt as you ever saw and has shown me better than a three minute gate in double harness. I have refused $500 for him. The first time I ever hitched him to anything was last fall, when he was two years and three months old, and in less than half an hour after harnessing I trotted him a half mile against a double team in 2 min. 2 sec., without a skip."

WHAT THE PEOPLE SAY

I got a chest of McFarland's tea and am well pleased.—Samuel Wilson, Euphrasia.

And so did I get a chest, and my stomach feels better after drinking Mac's tea.—Wm. J. Morrow, Glascott.

THE INMATES OF WREXHAN.

"I think you are hard upon poor Finchy, sir," said Norman, kindly. "I am sure Lily is a very nice girl, and so pleasant and pretty, anybody would be glad to go and see her."

"Umph!" grunted the old man. "Let her go and see the girl alone then. As to you, Norman, I want you at once in my study, please, as you seem to have done your breakfast, and we will leave Mrs. Finch to her tears. I hate tears!" he added, viciously, as he rose from the table; "they make a woman's nose red and they never have the slightest effect upon my feelings. Come, Norman.

Norman followed his grandfather out of the room, and Mrs. Finch was left to herself. No sooner had the door closed upon them than she dashed the handkerchief away from her face, and shook her fist furiously after the old autocrat.

"How I hate you, you horrible old man, with your bad manners and your coarse speeches! Oh! why am I obliged to submit to all these insults meekly? if I wasn't poor and your paid servant, I would tell you what I think of you to your face as it is I can say nothing—I can only cringe, and smile and bear it all. But take care you dreadful old vulture. I will manage to pay you out for it all some day. We will see if all your fine plans will succeed. It is not for nothing that the poor cousin whom you insult daily is living in your house; you shall get it all back some day!"

Meanwhile Mr. King was telling his grandson about the black-edged letter with the French postmark.

"It is from Stella King," he said; "and her mother is dead. The girl writes me to know what she and her sister are to do."

"Dead! Mrs. King dead! Good gracious! it must be very sudden!"

"Yes, it seems she had a fall, slipped down some steps or something, and injured herself internally. The question is, what is to be done about the daughters?"

"They must come here, I suppose."

"Not a doubt of it; but if they do, something definite must be settled about the future."

"You mean about my marrying one of them, sir!"

"Yes, you know that is my wish. I was very much disappointed that you were so unsuccessful last year when you went over there. I have explained to you my reasons at some length, Norman."

"Yes, and I am quite prepared to do what you wish, sir, if it is possible. But I really must decline to make any further propositions to Stella King—I assure you that the girl has the temper of a wild beast."

"Ah! so had her mother, I remember. Well, it is a matter of indifference to me which you select, let it be the younger one if you prefer it."

"I have never seen her," said Norman, doubtfully.

"So much the better."

"She is a mere child."

"All the more easily moulded. I shall make her understand directly she comes that she must consider herself engaged to you; there must be no mistake about it. I can't leave my son's children destitute, and I don't want to rob you: it is the best way I know of, of being just to all my grandchildren, and of uniting the place and the money. There will be a small portion for Stella; but that will not make a very sensible difference to you. By the way, Norman, I wouldn't go running after Lily Finch, if I were you."

"I assure you, sir———" began Norman, earnestly.

"Well, well, I don't say you mean any harm; but I think Harriet Finch is deep enough to try and catch you for her daughter!"

Norman laughed.

"My dear grandfather, such an idea is ridiculous! I have only tried to be kind to poor little Lily; I think it must be very hard work to be governess to all those noisy children. I really don't think Finchy, poor old soul, is capable of such deep-laid schemes as you give her credit for."

"My dear boy, a woman is capable of the most of things. When you have lived as long as I have you will never trust one of them further than you can see them, young or old! I am only giving you a warning. Harriet Finch is a compound of falseness and duplicity. If it were not that it amuses me intensely to torment her, and probe her weak places," he added, smiling grimly, "I should have sent her away long ago."

"Poor Finchy, what would become of her?" said Norman, rather pityingly, for he always felt that his grandfather was hard upon the housekeeper.

"Exactly. She would starve. I know that. Nobody else in the world would pay her a hundred a year for ordering dinner and prying into everybody else's concerns. However she amuses me, and so she shall stay: but keep clear of Miss Lily, my boy. Besides, I hardly think that old Lady Dyson would thank you for your attentions to her children's governess."

Norman had looked a little bit shamefaced over his grandfather's accusations concerning pretty Lily Finch, for he was rather fond of wasting an hour or two occasionally in the school-room at Barfield when he had nothing better to do. But the matter seemed so unimportant to him that he did not take his grandfather's hints in a very serious light. He was about to assure him laughingly that his cautious were superfluous, when the door was flung open, and Mrs. Finch rushed excitedly in.

"Pray forgive me, my dear cousin!" she cried out, breathlessly, "I would not have interrupted you, but this has just arrived, and I felt sure it must be of importance," and with trembling and agitated hands, she held forward the dirty orange envelope of a telegram.

CHAPTER VII.

CECILY'S DETERMINATION.

It will be necessary to return to the two sisters at Valency.

Whilst poor Mrs. King lay dying, and her elder daughter was watching day and night by her mother's sick bed, kind Madame Halevy from the floor below, had taken pity upon the disconsolate young sister.

"Come and sit with me, my poor child," had said that motherly woman to her, as she met her wandering aimlessly and miserably in the passage outside her mother's room, whence the doctor had banished her by reason of her youth and inexperience.

"Come in my rooms and sit with me," and Cecily had been glad enough to go. It was wretched upstairs in their own apartment. The sitting room looked empty and deserted, the little maid was too busy running backward and forward between the doctor and the chemist to have time either to tidy or dust; instead of the bunches of fresh flowers, there were the empty glasses and the medicine bottles upon the tables, and the trays of cold, untasted food, which the sick woman was too ill to eat.

Cecily could do no good, she could only sit miserably by the fire, and wish the wretched state of things would end, and that her mother would get better. She was not very unhappy about her, not until the last day of all; when Stella came out of the room weeping, and told her there was no hope.

And even then Cecily, though she cried too, and turned pale, was, perhaps, more frightened than unhappy. Truth to say, Cecily King had no very great depth of affection or feeling. She was a selfish little woman, popular because of her pretty face and her light manner; but she had not the sensitive disposition and warm heart of the elder sister. As long as things went well with her own self, Cecily King cared very little even for those to whom natural affection bound her most closely.

She was practical, decided in will and opinion, and rather heartless and worldly in tendency.

She made herself happy in Madame Halevy's drawing-room down stairs. She got a novel and her fancy work, and she ate her meals with her French friends, and chattered to them merrily enough all the day long, and it did not weigh very heavily on her mind that her mother was seriously ill, and her sister was worn out with anxiety and watching just over head.

Of course, when she really understood that her mother could not live, her tears flowed fast and freely, and Madame Halevy soothed and comforted, and kissed her, and thought what a charming, sweet and tender-hearted girl she was, for Cecily had always been her favorite.

Very soon—as soon, indeed, as decency would admit of after her mother's death—Cecily escaped from the dismal dreariness of the silent, darkened rooms above, and took refuge again with her friends down stairs.

"Sweet child!" cried Madame Halevy, dissolved in tears herself, and gathering Cecily to her portly bosom, "how dear of you to come down to your old friend for comfort! Ah! that poor mamma, how sad it is! How I wish I could be a mother to you in her place," and the good old lady wept copiously.

As to Cecily, as soon as she decorously could she crept into her corner by the window, and furtively took up her novel again, in order to resume the thread of the tale which she had been obliged to leave yesterday, when she had been hastily summoned to her dying mother's side.

"After all," she said to herself with a certain amount of shame at what she was dying; "what is the use of sitting doing nothing; it can't do poor, dear mamma any good now. I might just as well finish the book as sit with my hands before me; and, oh, dear! how tired I am of having to be miserable. I wonder if it will ever be allowable to laugh and be happy again!"

Madame Halevy became more and more accustomed to the presence of the pretty girl, with her slight, graceful figure, and her fair hair, and more than once she said, sighingly, to her husband:

"Ah! If heaven had only given us a daughter like that, how happy we should be!"

"I wonder what will become of the poor girls!" answered her husband, who was as soft-hearted as his wife. "I dare say the poor children will be thrown upon the cold charity of their unfeeling English relations, who have hitherto never taken the slightest notice of them."

And then the worthy couple held a long and deeply-interesting discussion, of which Cecily King was the subject.

"Well, we shall see what they propose doing," said Monsieur Halevy, in conclusion. "Wait a day or two and see what will happen before we speak to her."

So the matter was allowed to rest.

It was the day after the funeral that Cecily came into her old friend's room, with tears of real despair and mortification in her eyes.

"Oh! Madame Halevy, Stella has written to our English grandfather, whom we have never seen, and she says we shall have to go to England to live with him. Poor mamma told her to write to him, she says, and that we are to go there if he will take us in."

"My dear child, it may be very much to your advantage to go and live with your grandfather."

"Oh, no, it will be terrible! It is a great empty house right in the country, miles away from any town—poor mamma has often told us about it; and there is nobody there but this bad-tempered old man. We might as well go into a convent at once."

For Stella, in her wisdom, had thought it better at first to suppress all mention of Mr. Norman Allingham. It was better, Stella argued to herself, and believed herself to be perfectly sincere in her arguments—it was better, if Cecily were destined to marry her cousin, that she should encounter that young gentleman with perfectly free and unbiassed mind.

The result, however, of her caution was that Cecily absolutely and totally declined to go to live with their grandfather.

Then came Madame Halevy's coup d'etat.

Taking the young girl's hands imploringly within her own, she told her that if the prospect of going to England was so very dreadful to her, there was yet another plan open to her, if she would only consent to it. She and her husband were old and childless, they had money enough and to spare; would Cecily remain with them and be their daughter?

Cecily expressed herself surprised and grateful; but she was evidently doubtful. The fact is, that the idea of a perpetual existence at Valency, alone with these old people and without Stella, did not at once present itself in a very attractive manner to her imagination. Would it not be almost better to go to England? And then Madame Halevy, seeing that she hesitated, began to paint her scheme in the brightest hues.

"My dear, we will only live for your happiness, my husband and I; we will devote ourselves to you. We will leave Valency, if you like, and go to Paris. You shall go out into society and be admired as much as you deserve, my pretty one; and we will find a husband for you who shall be worthy of you. Will that suit you?"

Yes, that would suit Cecily King very well indeed. Paris, that el dorado of all French girls—the aim and end of every hope and desire—glittered temptingly before her eyes. To be well dressed and admired, to go out to balls and to drive in the Bois—all that would be delightful to Cecily; decidedly, it would suit her very much better than the dull respectability of her grandfather's country house.

For once in her life Cecily was truly and sincerely grateful. She flung her arms about the old lady's neck, and embraced her rapturously, vowing to be a daughter to her and her husband, and to love her as a mother with the prettiest and most graceful manner, and in the best chosen words that could have possibly been selected.

But Stella, when she was told of it, was horrified. What was to become of the scheme of marrying Cecily to her cousin? and how was she to fulfil her mother's dying wishes if her sister persisted in being adopted by the old Halevys?

In vain she argued, entreated, and prayed—in vain she pleaded her own affection, her own dismay at being parted from her sister, the duty which they both owed to their mother's last desire, and the deference which it was only right they should pay to their unknown grandfather.

Seeing that no arguments had power to move her, Stella at length confided to her sister the scheme which their grandfather had laid out for the future of the two sisters.

"One of them,' she told her, "was destined to marry Norman Allingham, their cousin, in order that their grandfather might leave the money and the estate together, and at the same time make a sufficient provision for the other sister."

Cecily pondered a good deal over this communication; it evidently produced a great effect upon her.

"Well," she said, at last; "it will be best for you to marry him."

"Oh! no," cried Stella, blushing violently. "I assure you that poor, dear mamma wished it to be you, Cecily." She would not own to her sister that she had already seen and refused her cousin, and that it was he who was the hero of the fancy dress ball adventure, for the whole world.

"I might not like him," demurred Cecily, "Why should not you have your chance?"

Stella could not confess to her that the chance had been already hers, and that she had lost it.

"Well, I will tell you what I will do," said Cecily at last, "I will stay with the Halevys for six months in Paris, and then I will come over to England and join you. In that way I shall be able to see if the Halevys can find me a suitable husband as they promise to do, and you will see if you care about the cousin; he is probably a dreadful cub, with no manners—and then, if nothing better turns up, I will come over to England and join you. But go to Paris with the Halevys I must, for I shall never have such a chance in my life again."

It will be seen that for seventeen years of age Miss Cecily King had tolerably advanced views of life.

"After all, my dear Stella," she added, laughing, seeing that her sister looked rather grave over her worldly-minded speculation; "after all, you and I have got our way to make in the world, and only our facea to do it with. You can tell our old grandfather that I will marry our cousin if you like; it will not prevent my marrying some one else meanwhile if I choose, but since it grieves you so, I will tell the Halevys that I cannot live with them for good. I will only pay them a long visit."

And from this determination Cecily was not to be moved.

The Halevys began to make active preparations for moving to Paris at once, for Cecily managed to make them believe that she was so much upset by her mother's death that nothing but an immediate change of air would save her from being seriously ill.

It so happened at the same time that one of the professors of the ladies' college, where the two girls had been educated, had occasion to go to England rather suddenly upon a matter of business. The gentleman; who was white-haired and eminently respectable, and had, moreover, a middle-aged wife and several grown-up daughters, offered his services as an escort to Stella, who, he was told, was shortly bound to return to her native land.

So good an opportunity was not to be neglected, and Stella made up her mind not to wait for her grandfather's letter, but to start at once for Wrexham.

She bade an affectionate and tearful farewell to her sister and to the Halevys, and set off upon her travels, telegraphing before she did so to her grandfather in these words:

"I have found an escort, and am coming to England at once. My sister cannot come; remains in France with friends."

And when Mr. King opened this telegram he was very angry indeed.

CHAPTER VIII.

VARIATIONS FROM "NORMA."

"One, two, three, one, two three! B flat Maud, in the bass; oh! that is the second false note you have played in one line; please repeat the passage over again."

"How you worry me, Miss Finch," said Maud Dyson, shaking her shoulders sulkily.

"Miss Finch, what is seven times six?"

"Miss Finch, how is anybody to find out the velocity of a falling body by reducing the given time to seconds, and multiplying the height by the square of the number of seconds? It breaks one's head only to think of it!"

"Oh! Miss Finch, who was the King of France who shut up somebody else or other in an iron cage where he couldn't stand upright?"

Lily Finch turns around from her place by the piano, where she is superintending Maud's slovenly practising, and tries patiently to answer the three clamoring voices behind her. She forces her mind successively from the multiplication table to the velocity of falling bodies, and then on to the kings of France and their doings. She manages to give some kind of an answer to each; but she is not quite sure in her own mind that her answers are right, for how is one to be a walking encyclopedia upon every subject under the sun at twenty years of age and all for forty pounds per annum?

She turns back again to the piano and sighs a little wearily.

Willie, Tom, and Alice behind her, go on murmuringly and groaniogly with their respective studies; Maud, who is the eldest of her pupils, who is fourteen, torments her more than all the other three put together, strums away more vehemently than ever at the airs out of "Norma" which she is practising.

Lily glances away longingly out of the window, where the sun is shining brightly over the park, and leafless trees, and the white sprinkling of hoar-frost glitters like a shower of diamonds all over the grass. Lily wishes she were free to run out and take a long ramble by herself across the fields.

She is a pretty, graceful girl, with soft, large eyes that have a gentle pleading look in them, and smooth brown hair twisted up into a tight shining mass of plaits; her sensitive lips have at times a little tremulous quiver that reminds one of a little child in trouble, the lower part of her face is perhaps altogether rather childish and weak, and wanting in decision, and there is a timid, almost frightened expression in her soft eyes.

She looks very frightened just now as a shadow crosses the window rapidly and a man's face from without looks hastily into the room out of the sunshine.

Lily's delicate hued face reddens suddenly, and her hands tremble upon her knees.

"One, two, three," she repeats nervously, concentrating her attentions back upon the variations from "Norma." "Maud, dear, do be careful with those chords in the bass;" but her voice shakes a little for all her efforts, and Maud hears it.

In another minute the door opens, and a man looks into the school-room.

"Ain't you children going out this fine morning?"

There is a general uproar from the three younger children at the table.

"Oh! Edgar, do beg Miss Finch to let us have a holiday!" says Willie.

"Mayn't we have the pony and go to Datchley Woods?" imploringly from Tom.

"Do ask Miss Finch to let us off French dictation, Edgar?" cries Alice, clinging to hor elder brother's arm.

Sir Edgar Dyson looks at Lily. There is something more than ordinary interest in his brown eyes as he looks at her.

"Do you think Miss Finch is going to be very hard-hearted this morning, Alice?" he says in answer to his little sister, as he strokes her curly blonde head. "May we not all have a holiday?"

"I—I am sure I don't know whether Lady Dyson would approve," stammers Lily, confusedly, without venturing to meet the brown eyes that are fixed upon her so searchingly.

"I am quite sure mamma would rather our lessons were not interrupted," says Maud, pursing up her lips primly. And Lily looks more frightened than ever.

"I think it is better not," she said hurriedly. "As Lady Dyson is away to-day, it will be better, I dare say, to make no alteration, as Maud says."

"I think I am a better judge of what Lady Dyson might wish than Maud can be," answers Sir Edgar, lightly, "and I have decided that we are all going down to the farm to look at the new machinery I have bought. Stop that horrid row, Maud," turning rather sternly to her, "and go and put your things on, and off with you, children, too, and get your hats. Leave all your books as they are. Miss Finch will be kind enough to put them away for you, I dare say. Make haste and get ready every one of you."

"Hurrah!" from the two boys, a frantic hug from Alice; while Maud, who does not dare to disobey, rises slowly and reluctantly from the piano and follows the younger children out of the room.

Lily looks ready to escape too. Sir Edgar Dyson places himself before her—between her and the door.

"Please don't be in a hurry, Miss Finch," he says, with a gleam of amusement in his eyes; "are you not going to put away the children's books?"

"Please, Sir Edgar," she begins piteously, trembling, poor little thing, before him, but not daring to look.

"Lily!"

Then she looks up, startled and terrified, into his face.

"You poor little frightened thing, your eyes are like the eyes of some of those pretty antelopes I have seen in my travels, Lily; why do you look so terrified, child? Do you think I am going to hurt you?"

He had hold of both her hands by this time, and was drawing her towards him. He was a strongly-made, broad-shouldered man, not quite handsome, but with such a brave, honest face, that it came very near it.

"Oh! please, Sir Edgar———"

"If you call me Sir Edgar, I shall—kiss you!"

"Oh!" with a sort of gasp. There is a moment's silence, a little scuffle, a little fluttering sigh, and it is to be imagined that Sir Edgar Dyson has carried his terrific threat into execution, for a minute later, Lily, as red a rose, wrenches herself violently away from the baronet's encircling arms.

"You have no right—it is very wrong, indeed—you are very cruel," stammers the poor child, almost in tears.

"Forgive me, Lily, I have frightened you; don't cry, child, I wouldn't vex you for the world."

"It is very, very wicked," she repeats, trembling.

"I confess I fail to see the enormity of the offence," answers Sir Edgar, boldly, "if I love you and you love me, why may I not kiss you!"

"You must not speak to me so," she says, wringing her hands together; "if Lady Dyson knew———"

"But Lady Dyson does not know."

"If she were to hear, if anyone were to tell her, think how angry she would be—she would send me away."

"In which case I should come after you and bring you back," retorts Sir Edgar.

And then Lily lifts her eyes once more to his face.

CRASH IN CAPE OF GOOD HOPE COLONY.

Famine, Depression, and Suicides.

Mr. H. B. Joseph, one of the passengers by the Austrian barque Lee, from Cape Town, and a Cape commission, dealer in diamonds, copper, wool, etc., tells some distressing tales of the sufferings in Cape Colony. In parts of the country, he says, there has been no rain for three years, and the people are starving. The condition of affairs in Cape Town, at Kimberley, and Du Toits Pan (the diamond fields), the Leydenburg gold field, the Orange Free States, and surrounding country is worse than it has been for years. What adds to the general distress consequent on the failure of the crops is a disaster at the great diamond mine at Kimberley, 600 miles up from Cape Town and 400 miles Natal. The mine is 380 feet deep, and 1½ mile in circumference. The soft debris has fallen back into the mine in such quantities that it is esitmated that 18 months will be required for its removal. Upwards of 4,000 tons fell within 24 hours. The extent of the calamity can be judged by the fact that this celebrated mine has yielded £3,000,000 in diamonds a year. The effect at Cape Town has been most disastrous. The revenue has fallen off 50 per cent., and the mining shares have gone down 75 per cent. It is estimated, said Mr. Joseph, that it will cost £250,000 to clear the mine. The fall in the price of diamond shares has ended in a tragedy. There are 65 diamond mining companies, with a subscribed capital of £7,000,000, and of these companies only fourteen are paying dividends. Most of these mines are within a radus of 150 miles, and at an average of 600 miles from Cape Town. The extent of the commercial convulsion in illustrated by the Great Central Diamond Company. It had a subscribed capital of £900,000 and paid taxes on £840,000. Two years ago the shares were rated at £360 each, but to-day they are worth only £80. The Freres' Diamond Mining Company at De Beers, a quarter of a mile from the Kimberley mine, with a subscribed capital of £130,000—£100 in shares—has been sold out by the sheriff for £15,000 for rates owed to the Mining Board. Mr. Herm Wilegroot, a leading merchant, blew out his brains on account of all these troubles, and two weeks afterward Mr. J. R. Schonz, resident magistrate, killed himself. Altogether there have been ten suicides of leading men caused by the commercial depression. The most terrible stories of starvation come from the copper region, especially from the neighborhood of the great Manamaculand mines. Capt. Segarich said that commercial circles in Cape Colony are so greatly depressed that many of the colonists are returning to Europe, and especially to England. He said that he could have brought many more passengers if he had had room.

The Cape Argus just to hand, does not contain quite such depressing reports as those quoted above, but it records the attempted suicide of Mr. E. Josephs, a member of the Kimberley Mining Board, and corroborates the statement that a serious slip of reef has taken place at the Kimberley mine. The Kimberley correspondent of the Argus also goes to show that affairs at the diamond fields are not of the most sparkling character. The Argus correspondent says: Since my last things here are much on a muchness, not any sign of improvement, but the tendency seems rather to be the other way. We find creditors suing and taking out executions on a more extensive scale than usual. Last day of term provisional day in our High Court, the Standard Bank prayed for and obtained judgment, either provisional or final, to the tune of £23,950, Bank of Africa £12,881, Cape of Good Hope Bank £950—not by any means a healthy sign. Auctions are the order of the day. Insolvencies increase, and consequently stocks are thrown, or rather forced, upon the market to such an extent that legitimate trade is entirely in the background. Goods, good and sound, may be purchased at auction at prices for which the same article cannot be bought in England or manufacuring districts. Such things as clothing, boots, haberdashery, etc., etc., are, so to speak, given away. Our population is decreasing every day. The down country mule-trains always leave full of passengers, artisans, and others who cannot find employment here any longer. They all must have a certain amount of money, which of course goes out of the country with them. It is much to be regretted that employment cannot be found for such people, so as to keep them in the country. There are still here hundreds of people who are out of employment, and many with families, having spent their small savings, in a starving condition, unable to find work.

Princess Victoria's Reception in Berlin.

From time immemorial no foreign element had found its way into the Prussian court. It is not surprising, therefore, that she was not welcomed by what one calls "society" in Berlin with the same unbounded joy as by the middle and lower strata of the population. If she was proud of her British habits and descent, so were they of the power that Prussia had obtained in the world, owing not a little to their prowess and fidelity. Her references, however made, to English manners and customs were constructed as criticisms of those in her new father-land. This habit of fault-finding among the upper classes it has taken a quarter of a century to smooth over, whilst the lower orders have found her throughout exactly what they had expected her to be when first she came, viz., a person of truly high-bred simplicity, of warm sympathies for all the sorrows and joys of her fellow-creatures, of gently winning ways, a friend of the ignorant and helpless, a believer in man's immortal soul. Her house at the end of the Linden they instinctively know to be not a "house divided against itself," but the home of such complete harmony as is rarely found among married couples whatever their station in life.—GEORGE VON BUNSEN, in Harper's Magazine for August.

A Bordeaux merchant owns a monster mastiff called Lion. Walking with him on the quay, there came a little mad dog along, followed by an excited crowd. Lion seized it by the neck, leaped into the water, and held it under water until drowned. This was excellent, and Lion received an ovation; but as Lion subsequently developed a tendency to do the same by all small dogs, mad or sane he has perforce been muzzled.

THE FARMER'S CORNER.

Farm Work for August.

The soil for winter wheat needs to be prepared at once. A clover sod may be treated to a dressing of well-rotted manure, before plowing it under. Much depends upon the variety of seed wheat, therefore sow only the best. If there is danger of the Hessian fly it may be well to defer seeding until next month. For fall fodder white turnips may be sown now. Oat or barley stubble, when the soil is rich, can be turned under and will produce six hundred bushels or more of late turnips per acre....Now is an excellent time to reclaim waste land. Brush cut this month will rarely sprout again, and drains may be opened, where it would be impossible to get teams on the land at any other season. It is best to clear thoroughly, and sow to grass, even if it be only a small portion of the waste land, and thus avoid the discouragement of half reclaiming a larger area.... Lime is an old-time fertilizer, and rarely fails to give good returns on grass land abounding in vegetable matter. Forty bushels per acre may be spread from the waggon.....Muck for use in the stables can be dug now. Draw the muck, with a scraper or otherwise, from the field to some dry place near by, where it can dry out, after which it may be taken to the stable or store-room. Muck increases in value by "weathering," and it is well to have a year's supply constantly on hand.

Fall plowing for spring sowing has the effect of fallow to some extent, and the earlier it is done, the better. It improves heavy clay land more than a light sandy one.

In a time of drouth, look for and locate the springs or any indications that may lead to a supply of water. It is sometimes necessary to deepen wells which fail to furnish sufficient water....Weeds should not be allowed to go to seed. It is not enough to pull them up, as the seeds already formed will ripen and propagate the pests. The only safe method is to burn the weeds; throwing them on the manure heap only increases a good seeding.

Live Stock in Mid-summer.

This is a trying time for all kinds of farm animals; pastures are usually short, old grain is high, and the new not in the best condition for feeding. It is well to make the most of wooded pastures, where the animals can enjoy the shade during the hot days, and get a part of their living from the undergrowth. A good supply of fodder corn helps to keep the cows up to their full flow of milk, and the other live stock in good health and flesh....Horses are often extremely annoyed by flies, especially when in a shadeless pasture. It is best to let them stand in a dark stable during mid-day, and turn them out near nightfall. Horses, when at work, need the protection of a fly-sheet. This is easily made, and prevents much fretting....Lambs are now separated from the ewes, and should be pastured as far apart as possible. Place some wethers with the lambs to lead the flock, and in a few weeks they will be entirely weaned....Pigs for early market need to be pushed vigorously, with abundant feed at the trough. The apple orchard makes a fine pasture for swine. The falling fruit is usually wormy, and the pigs in eating it, destroy hosts of insects, to the mutual benefit of the swine and the orchard.

The Fruit Garden in August.

As soon as the raspberries are off, cut away the stems that bore them, and encourage the new stalks....Blackberries often color well before they are ripe; for home use or a near market, let them be ripe; if to be shipped to a distance, they must be firm. Cut away all suckers not needed....Watch grape vines for the first signs of mildew, and apply sulphur; hand-pick the beetles and large caterpillars; keep the laterals pinched back, leaving one leaf of the new growth; remove shoots which start where they are not needed. Keep bearing shoots well tied up....Strawberry plants layered in pots may be set out. Can or dry surplus fruits.

August Work in the Orchard.

The cultivator, whether of orchard or garden, has never a season of leisure; but if there is any month, except in winter, in which work is the least pressing, it is at present. Recreation may well be taken now. One may recreate both body and mind in various ways, as with a fishing excursion, camping out, etc., without other object than rest and change. Excursions to the lakes or to the sea-shore will be preferred by many. A profitable kind of recreation is to visit the orchards and gardens of others: relief from home cares is obtained, and much may be learned. Cultivators, as a rule, gladly welcome others who are interested in the same pursuits....Preparations for the fairs should not be lost sight of. Encourage the local fair by competing for prizes, and if any are awarded, be sure and take the money. Nothing destroys the common interest in the fair so quickly, as for those who do not think they need the money, to decline to take the awards. If only twenty-five cents, take it and be proud of it....Newly planted trees will be helped by a mulch; keep off late insects, and do not allow weeds to grow....Budding will begin this month. Keep a close watch on the pickers....Early apples and pears are often more profitable than late kinds. Assort and pack them in attractive manner....Dry surplus fruit, and use the windfall apples to press for vinegar.

Kitchen and Market Garden.

When a crop of any kind is off, at once clear up the refuse; much good food for cow, pigs or poultry may be saved. Spade or plow the ground, manure if need be, and put in some other crop, or sow to buckwheat, to be turned under later....Sow this month; spinach, for fall use, next month is early enough for the crop for spring; beets, of the early kinds for greens; turnips, of the Yellow Stone, Aberdeen, and Cow Horn varieties, and bush-beans, for pickling and late use. Some of the early Peas may yield a crop, but if the season is unfavorable, mildew will take them. The hoe is the great implement this month, whether in the form of the hand-hoe, or the various kinds of cultivators, and should be used freely, whether there are weeds or not, for the benefit of the crop. Cabbage, celery, etc., grow all the more rapidly, if the surface of the soil is kept light and mellow....Thinning is rarely overdone; Ruta Bagas should be at least ten inches apart. If carrots, late beets, salsify, etc., still stand too thickly, draw out for use those that crowd one another....Egg plants must be kept free of the Colorado-beetle; place hay or straw under the fruit, to keep it from the ground....Sweet corn stalks, as soon as the ears are gathered, should be cut up, and if not needed by the cows, cured for winter; burn all "smutted" stalks....Hoe melons as long as the vines will allow, and after that, pull large weeds by hand; as the fruit approaches maturity, place a shingle or thin board under it, to promote equal ripening....Harvest onions when the tops fall over, and let them cure a few days in the sun; store in any airy place, where they can be spread....Sweet potatoes should be kept free from weeds, and the vines moved, to prevent them from taking root....Keep tomatoes tied up to the trellis; watch for the large "worm," which eats foliage and young fruit, and hand-pick....Weeds are the chief care this month, and "pussley" is a sure indicator of the industry of the gardener.—American Agriculturist.

THE WAR IN THE SOUDAN, EGYPT.

A Sharp Contest with a Horde of Fanatics.

General Hicks joined our camp on the 25th, about 18 miles south of the fort at Kawa, on hearing that the enemy were advancing in large numbers against us. About 11 on the morning of the 25th a large body of horsemen were seen approaching from the south-east, about 2,000 yards distant. There was a mirage at the time on the horizon, and the effect of these swarthy cavaliers galloping as it were through it gave them the appearance of a phantom army. They approached to 1,000 yards, when rockets and shells were at once discharged at them. The soldiers—who had formed in a solid square threw out or little iron spikes joined in three—a device calculated to make the ground inconvenient for stepping on the sandalshod savages or horses without shoes. The horsemen now raced off, and were no more seen for the time. But they hung about us during the day, though no attack was made. On the 29th tents were struck, as usual, at daybreak, and the order given to march at 7. The great difficulty of General Hicks's movements is the total absence of cavalry, and all reconnoitring has to be done by the officers of his staff. The danger of this insufficient means of scouting was shown now. Colonel Farquhar, who has all along been indefatigable in his duty, accompanied by Captain Massey, and four Bashi-Bazouks, had not been far when they raced in to report the enemy's advance. So rapid was this that in fifteen minutes they were on us in a cloud. It was 9 and we had marched some five miles. About 1,000 yards to our front and right was a wood, out of which spearmen were seen pouring in their thousands, led by their chiefs carrying gaily coloured banners. We had formed a vast square and halted.

A TREMENDOUS FUSILADE was opened from our front face, apparently without effect, for they still came on gallantly; but at 500 yards they began to fall fast. Still the chiefs led on their men with all the reckless and romantic chivalry of the old Saracen knights. One by one fell dismounted, two or three to rise again and dash forward on foot, waving their standards, only to drop and rise no more. The rebels were commanded by Amer Makushigi, who, with another leader, the Cheik El Arakee, had been only recently sent from Kordofan by Mahomet Achmet, the so-called Mahdi. Calmly, and apparently without the slightest fear, did these Arab cavaliers ride about from right to left, as if seeking to pick out a weak point at which to charge and break into our compact body. Their devotedness was in vain. One after another they hit the ground, the first named chieftain being rolled over by the Nordenfeldt at our left corner. After half an hour's continued rattle of musketry, seeing their chiefs fallen, and the banners in the dust, the advancing hordes waver, and are greeted with a tremendous howl from our troops, who had stood firmly and unflinchingly, and I may say as steadily as any troops could. Now the enemy move off to the right among the long grass, and our front is cleared. Shells are bursting among them. All are soon out of sight, except a few who walked about most unconcernedly, and actually singly came up, after the rest had retreated, to within a few yards, brandishing their spears in defiance. One after another these poor fanatics were knocked over. When the smoke had rolled away it was seen that the ground was strewn with corpses, most of them within 400 yards.

A STRANGE EPISODE

occurred now. Two men were lying with one of the standards before spoken of within about six yards. An Egyptian captain was sent out by his colonel to secure it. No sooner had he taken hold of it than up rose the standard bearer, who was wounded only in the leg, and dashed a spear into his left hand; while the other, not wounded at all, also attacked him. The officer cut over the first with a blow on his neck, and the other was shot, but not before a desperate struggle had taken place. And now when victory was certain, it was a curious sight to see the Bashi-Bazouks, who on camels had been acting as scouts, show their joy by brandishing their rifles over their heads; while their band of music struck up a wild triumphal air accompanied by "Tam-Taming." Three cheers were now given for the Khedive, then for Hicks Pasha, then for Suleiman Pasha, the General who commanded under the instructions of General Hicks, who is, of course, in supreme authority. The of the troops at this their first victory was intense. Their officers came up and warmly shook hands with the English officers. The number of the enemy was 4,000 or 5,000, and that of the killed about 500. Numbers went away wounded or were carried off. Our loss was two killed and a few wounded. Several friendly chiefs, whose tribes have been plundered, and who have had several of their men killed, have come in from day to day. One of them wears a complete set of chain armour, in the style of a Crusader, the long sword having the cross as a guard. They say the model is from armour taken by the Saracens from the Crusaders.

Burdette's Advice to His Partner, Hatton.

Listen to me, Ben-Ibrahim, and may Allah smooth your path:

My son, if you are going into politics, write these axioms upon your heart with hooks of steal, as it were:

It is right to steal from the government. If it isn't right it is customary, which gives the practice a color of legal right.

Do not steal from the government as though you were ashamed of it. Only a common pickpocket is ashamed of his profession. Steal boldly. Plunge your thievish arms into the coffers of the government clear up to the elbows, shut both hands tight and come away with a full hold and a fair deck-load. When you grab, grab as though you never expected to hold office again. Be like the lightning, which never strikes twice in the same place. Because it doesn't need to; because it never leaves anything to strike at.

When the band of thieves to which you belong is sufficiently unanimous in its rapacity to cover the theft with a joint resolution by all means resolve. It adds to the sin of the theft the voice of hypocrisy and the crime of cowardice. Allah is not deceived thereby, nor are the people fooled, but it lays another plate of brass over your pachydermatous hide and drugs into yet profounder slumber your superannuated conscience. By the beard of the profit, it would be hard lines for the believers if they had to believe all that the shiekh tells them!

If you sought to be a clerk in the booths of the merchants of Filed-el-f-hia you would earn $2 a day by twelve hours' work. If you were a scribe at the desk of the reporter, you would labor eighteen hours each day and your ability would earn for you about $6 a week, at your real value. If you journeyed with the caravans of the railroad $50 a month you would get and be glad to get it. You are an average $10 a week man. But you go to the Legislature and you can pay yourself out of the treasury of the State $10 a day for resting. It is wonderful. But as you do less harm while you rest than you are sure to accomplish when you work it is better for the State that you spend all the days of your term in resting. When you bind yourself to do nothing whatever, you are cheap at $10 a minute if you can be got for no less.

Promise everybody everything they ask for. It is so much easier to promise a man what he wants than it is to refuse him and have him torment you with importunities and pester you for reasons. Then, when the day for the fulfilment of the promise comes to hand, renew the promise. Take up one note by giving another. In the slang of the infidel, stand him off for another term, and tell him that when you go back again then you will do all these things for him. And if it be so that you do not go back, how can you do anything for him? And if you do go back say to him that you will not buy your place of any man. What dirt is this he throws upon the beard of a reformer? By the head of the Sultan, there are hardly enough places for your own family.

In your official career ever practice a rigid economy in all departments and disbursements out of your own immediate reach. Cut off the appropriation for chewing gum for the orphans' homes and recommend that the orphans solace their juvenile jaws with inexpensive but long lasting quids cut from the heels of their rubber overshoes. The money thus saved to the State you can appropriate for the usual purpose of giving yourself a railroad excursion, with all the appurtenances thereunto appertaining.

Talk a great deal, but never say anything. And strive to keep what you say from the ears of the scribe who sitteth in the seat of the correspondent, for he hath an evil eye, and the point of his pencil is the sting of a scorpion. He dippeth his pen in gall and aqua fortis and—death to his race—it is the love of his heart to impale on his venomous quill the honest statesman who is trying to earn a year's living in a two weeks' vacation. May Allah break the leg of his camel.

Reform is ever a good thing before election. The trill of the R in pronouncing it is most readily acquired by closing the left eye at the moment of uttering the word. This also adds great emphasis, and deeply intensifies the meaning of the word, which is a Latin compound os res, a thing, and formale, to form; that is, to form and shape things, to fix things. See? You don't? Then you are no true reformer if you can't see that. Reform, Ben-Ibrahim, is like an "echo" valve. It works well—in a horn.

Ever be on the defensive, and regard every constituent your secret foe. Pat him on the head with one hand, and hold him by the throat with your other. The world of politics is one vast camp. So is the average politician, Ben-Ibrahim; so are you.

If you do all this, Ben-Ibrahim, you will not be much worse than the Franks and infidels; you will make for yourself a name and reputation your children will be ashamed to remember, and by and by the people you have plundered will lay you far back on a high and lonely shelf, from whence you will never be taken down until the old bone man comes along looking for mummies.

A Partially Dead Man.

The Morning Herald, Baltimore, Md., states: Major B. S. White, of this city, describes his miraculous cure as follows: I have been a partially dead man for ten years. Doctors attributed my sufferings to the enlargement of certain glands. The quantity of medicine I took without relief would be sufficient to set up a first-class apothecary shop. Finally St. Jacobs Oil was recommended. I had my spinal column thoroughly rubbed with it. All those knots, kinks and stiffness have passed away, and I am myself again."

Here is a quaint epitaph from New England that tells the whole story. People in such weather as this will be able to appreciate it:

Capt. James B——,
July 17, 1747,
Being melted to death by extreme heat.

Bilious and Dyspeptic Patients,

THE DANGER OF OVER-EXERTION.

A Stalwart Man Becomes Weaker than a Child and then Recovers His Former Strength.

(Waterloo, N. Y., Observer.)

In these days of rowing giants and athletic heroes fine physical development is more observed than ever before since the time of the Athenian games. A man who shows the elements of physical power is looked up to far more than in the days of our ancestors, possibly because there are fewer specimens of well-developed manhood than then. An emissary of this paper met a magnificent specimen of physical power a few days since in the person of Dr. A. W. McNames, of Waterloo. His muscles, which showed unusual development, were as hard as wood. At his request the writer sought to pinch him in the arms or legs, but found it wholly impossible. A realization of what is meant by an iron man was fully made manifest.

"Have you always been so stalwart as this?" inquired the news gatherer.

"Not by any means," was the reply. "When a young man I was always strong and active and felt that I could accomplish anything. This feeling so took possession of me on one occasion that I attempted to lift a box which four men found it impossible to move. I succeeded in placing it on the waggon, but in two minutes from that time I was unconscious and remained so for hours and when I recovered consciousness I vomited a large quantity of blood. From that day I began to grow weak and sickly. I believed that I had suffered some internal injury and experienced a general debility, which seemed similar to the effects produced by malaria. My back was very weak. I had no appetite, and at times loathed food. My lips were parched and cracked. My head felt as though it were entirely opened at the top and it pained me on the side intensely. In six weeks' time I had fallen away from 208 pounds to less than 170. I was in a most wretched condition. I was completely discouraged."

"What did the doctors say about you?"

"Almost everything. I consulted no less than six different physicians. They all treated me and none did me any good. At that time I was suffering intensely. I could not sit upright but was obliged to rest in a cramped, uneasy position. I was compelled to urinate every five minutes and I passed over three quarts every day. I was not living, I was existing.

One night (how well I remember it!) my wife had put the children all in bed, when the feeling came over me, that I should live but a very short time, my wife and I talked matters all over and I gave the minutest directions as to what she should do after I was gone. I was not in a flighty condition by any means, for the doctor, on leaving town the day following, bade me good bye, saying he never expected to see me again, for I was suffering with Bright's disease of the kidneys in its last stages. Within the next few days more than twenty friends came to bid me good bye. Among the number was Dr. John L. Clark. He asked me what I had used in the way of medicines. I told him. He then recommended a remedy of which I heard much, but about which I was very skeptical. If faith was an element of power it certainly was lacking in my case."

"And so you did not try it?"

"On the contrary, I did try it and to my surprise it seemed to go to just the spot. Indeed, it was the most palatable thing I had taken into my mouth for months. I relished it."

"And did it cure you?"

"Do I look as if it did?"

"Yes, indeed. What was it?"

"Warner's Safe Cure."

"A proprietary medicine?"

"Of course. What of that? I suppose I once had as great a prejudice against advertised medicines as any one could have. When I was studying medicine at Ann Arbor, Michigan, I used to vow with the rest of the class that we would fight all such remedies at all times. When a man comes down to the last hour, however, and bids his wife and friends good bye, such bigoted prejudices as these all vanish, I can assure you and any remedy than can cure is gladly welcomed."

"And how have you been since then?"

"As well—or better, than before."

"Do you still exert your strength?"

"Certainly. But I do not over-exert, as formerly. My strength is increasing every day, and my health is number one. I know that my life was saved by Warner's Safe Cure and I believe it is the best medicine that was ever compounded by any chemist or physician. I am willing the doctors should sneer at me for such a statement if they choose, but I have proven its truth, and am prepared to stand by it."

The above experience should be of great value to all who are suffering. It shows the deceptive nature of this terrible malady; that all symptoms are common to it and that there is but one way by which it can be absolutely avoided.

Bismarck has changed his doctors often of late, and his last attack is attributed to unsuccessful treatment by a new hand.

The North American Indians know more in their day and generation than the children of light. They first used petroleum as a Hair Dressing. Carboline is made from petroleum deprived of its disagreeable properties and delightfully perfumed.

A boy who buried his Billy goat the other day put this inscription on the headstone, for he thinks it will attract thousands of people next spring: "Buck bier."

W. A. Edgars, of Frankville, was cured of Liver and Kidney Complaint after life was despaired of. He had remained from ten to fifteen days without an action of the bowels.—Burdock Blood Bitters cured him, and he writes that he is a better man than he has been for twenty years past. (7)

"What is pride, my son?" said a gentleman to his little boy. "Walking with a cane when you ain't lame," he said.

THE QUESTION HAS OFTEN BEEN ASKED.

Can—Rupture—(abdominal hernia) be cured? We most emphatically say, YES. That this part of the body offers no exception to those physiological laws which govern the whole physical economy and it makes not a particle of difference whether the age of the Rupture is one year or a hundred years. AN ACROSTIC,

Look out ye farmers and threshers all
And see that you buy for Spring, Summer
Right splendid good oil, [and Fall
Don't be misled by statements bland,
Insist upon having the very best brand,
Now good as ever, in fact it is grand,
Everlasting wear without grit or sand,
Machines run smoothly, no jarring or noise,
And engines too in its use rejoice.
Carding also it suits, as you plainly see,
Heavy gristing cannot do without me.
In fact all machines are blessed by its use,
New or old it will save from wear and abuse,
Every man try it, we are sure it will please.
Our initials, when read, will give the cue
In looking for oil, the best and the true,

LADIES DEPARTMENT.

Flirting at Full Speed—Young Old Ladies—The Wife's Influence—Fun for the Girls.

The Wife's Influence.

Two gentlemen, at a large reception in New York last winter, were discussing one of the foremost politicians in the country—a man who, whether in office or out, always keeps himself prominently before the public. "I knew him at college," said one of the gentlemen. "He was a man with a clear head, extraordinary memory, and much personal magnetism. But I can not understand why he chose a public life or has pushed himself forward so persistently. He was a lazy, thoughtful, visionary fellow, absolutely destitute of ambition." "I can tell you the secret," said the other. "You will see it in his wife's nose. There she is! Did you ever see a more perfect incarnation of energy and love of command? Napoleon would have chosen her for one of his marshals at first sight." His friend was amused at the guess, and said, presently: "There is another of my old classmates, P. He was a thin, ambitious, scholarly fellow, with refined tastes and high aims. He now is a fat, indolent animal, without a thought, apparently, but his cognac and terrapin. Who is to blame for that?" "His wife's mouth and her money. I will show her to you." He pointed out a gross, voluptuous, woman, richly dressed. "P.," he resumed, "has lived in idleness since his marriage. He was not strong enough to carry the weight of so much wealth and so much vulgarity. They have borne him down. He will never rise." Young men at school and college are very apt to be enraptured with a sparkling eye, a rosy cheek, or some charm of manner in some young women that they happen to meet. They are hardly masters of themselves; and a moonlight night, or a song, suddenly tempts them to ask the charming creature who has bewitched them to share their future. They do not consider that she will be the most real, active force in their whole lives, almost irresistible, with power to drag them down or to lift them up in body, mind, and soul.

Flirting at Full Speed.

"Sights!" exclaimed the conductor on the Third Avenue Elevated railroads in reply to the query of a reporter of the New York Tribune, concerning the effects of the warm weather on the road's usual panorama. "Well, I should say there are sights. Did it ever occur to you that New Yorkers are the most independent and natural people in the world? If they want to say a thing, they say it; and if they want to do anything, why they do it. To have their own way is as natural with them as to exist; they care little for what others think about them, and in their own pursuit of happiness quickly resent being interfered with. During the hot weather the passengers are taken into the family circles of Third avenue as if they belonged there by right of membership. One moment you sit down with a family to supper; the next you assist a mother to spank a rebellious youngster, a second later you are interested in the adjustment of a ribbon; then the old man drunk again appears. A social gathering comes along; a wedding; somebody in tears; a connubial battle; you see a kiss snatched audaciously from pouting lips, while sometimes there comes the heart-touching picture of little white hands clasped over the breast of the little stiff body on the bed, with the little dead face as white as the little shroud. It is pretty hard to keep one's eyes away."

"Especially when there are pretty girls to be seen," suggested the reporter.

"Well, yes. Though I am out of the market myself," replied the conductor. "I admit there is great fascination for the eyes in pretty women. Do the trainmen flirt with the young ladies on the road? Certainly, some of them do. Why not? Some of them have their regular salutations—some of the best-looking fellows often get from forty to fifty between Chatham square and Harlem bridge—from young women who watch for them with a regularity that must be hard on housework. The majority of such flirtations are from private dwellings or apartments. Shop girls are afraid of the foreman's eye, and we have had several restrictive orders issued about noticing employed women on account of their employers complaining at headquarters. Some grumpy bosses put screens before their windows, and others watch closely and fine the young women heavily if they catch them flirting with the trainmen. But, bless you, they can't stop it. A girl at a machine breaks a thread, or jumps a stitch, or something that necessitates her leaning her head down sideways, at just the right angle to give the young man with the cap, who is looking out for it on the platform, a fascinating smile."

"Do these flirtations often have results?"

"Indeed they do. I know nearly a dozen trainmen married during the past two years whose acquaintance with their wives began in passing their windows on the cars. At first the girl flirts for fun, and probably remembers or thinks nothing more of the young man after the train has passed. Then she gets used to seeing him and misses him when he does not show up. It soon becomes an open book for the rest of the hands, and they recognize her and can tell her by her anxiety and disinclination to flirt with others just how far 'gone' the young woman is. If it is reciprocal, all the rest of the boys take a respectful interest in the affair. They politely touch their caps, or sympathetically jerk a thumb over the shoulder in the direction of the solid man, as they pass the lady. Sometimes a genuine courtship, in which neither knows the other's name and not a word is spoken, will go on for months before the parties meet."

Young Old Ladies.

There are few old ladies in the fashionable world nowadays, says the World, and there need not be any. Women triumphantly pass for 35 who have recently kept in commemoration their 50th birthday. True, there are always a few friends with inconvenient memories who could mention the exact date on which the 35-year-old bicentenarian first opened her eyes to the light; and then there is the record in the old family Bible But, fortunately, the first dare not tell, lest a question be raised as to their own age: and as for the old-fashioned book, like many another old-fashioned thing, it is not prized as an antique and therefore does not adorn the drawing-room table or betray them.

In a word, women on the down-hill path of life may and do practice the art of rejuvenation without fear or trembling. Art competes with time, and victory perches on the banner of the restorative artists. Years in passing are no longer permitted to mark their progress on a woman's visage with crow's feet, wrinkles, scant locks, faded complexion, and toothless gums. Specialists in the varied departments of rejuvenation are ready with preventives and restoratives at a moment's warning. The instant a woman feels she is on the decline she has but to call in their aid.

Ladies' Fun.

Female pugilists should wear "poke" bonnets.

A flirt's heart is like an omnibus—always room for one more.

Lissette: "Well, Gertie, how pleases you the trumpeter?" Gertie: "Oh, good! but his kisses taste a little after brass."

Milton says: "Beauty stands only in the admiratian of weak minds," but then everyone knows that the poor poet was blind.

A woman can sometimes do something without damaging others, but when a lady undertakes to help herself some man has to suffer for it.

A Hamilton man, whose wife knocked him out of bed in a rage and bunged his eyes, tells his friends he is suffering from inflamatory room-mate-ism.

A young lady being told at a recent fire to stand back or else the hose would be turned on her, replied: "Oh, I don't care; they are striped on both sides, anyway."

A Precise Father—He did not object to his daughter joining a musical society, but gently insisted that abbreviations were coarse—"Philip Harmonic sounds more genteel, my dear."

Discarded lover: "Yes, I felt terribly when she jilted me." Same (after a pause and sighing): "And, do you know, I had hardly begun to pay her attentions when I learned through a bookkeeper in a bank that she had $300,000 on deposit in her own right."

"Papa," asked a little 6-year-old daughter of an up-town physician, "wasn't Job a doctor?" "I never heard that he was; why?" "Because mamma said the other day that she didn't think that you had any of the patients of Job."

A Beloit doting mother, who has long lived on dry land, recently took her daughter to the "River of Rock." To a confident she expressed her mind: "I never saw a girl like our Sary Jane. I worked two hull days on her bathin' dress, and don't you think, she got it wringin' wet the fust time she put it on!"

A year or two ago young A. aged 25 and impecunious, married the widow B., aged 40 and possessing a comfortable property. A day or two since they were inspecting their new house. "Tidy little property isn't it?" remarked the geneleman. "Yes," remarked the lady, "but it wouldn't have been here it it hadn't been for my money." "True," said A., camly, "neither would you." To this indiscreet remark may, perhaps, be attributed the court plaster that adorns Mr. A.'s countenance.

Two annecdotes from a London correspondent's letter: "A young American lady was expressing her ardent desire to visit Stratford-on-Avon. 'What in the world do you want to go to Stratford for, Miss X.?' inquired a young Englishman who was present. 'Are there any good races there?' An American acquaintance asked a young Swiss if he had gone to see the falls of Niagara during his tour. 'I really do not remember,' he answered hesitatingly. 'Niagara!—ah, yes—that is the place where Blondin used to walk on the tight rope.'"

Sic Vos Non Vobis Dramatisaris, Writers!—Wife of his bosom (just home from the play): "And then that darling Walter Lisson, looking like a Greek god, drew his stilletto and delivered, oh! such an exquisite soliloquy over her tomb—all in blank verse—like heavenly music on the organ!" He: "Why he's got a voice like a raven, and can no more deliver blank-verse than he can fly." She: "Ah, well—it was very beautiful, all the same—all about love and death, you know!" He: "Who wrote the piece, then?" She: "Who wrote the piece? Oh-er-well—his name's sure to be on the bill somewhere—at least I suppose it is!"

Household Arrangements Three Hundred Years Ago.

What would servants in the present day say to such a code of rules and regulations as was adopted three hundred years ago in the household of Sir J. Harrington, the translator of "Ariosto?" A servant absent from prayers to be fined 2d.; for uttering an oath, 1d.; and the same sum for leaving a door open; a fine 2d. from Lady Day to Michaelmas, for all who are in bed after seven, or out after nine; a fine of 1d. for any beds unmade, fire unlit, or candle-box uncleaned after eight; a fine of 4d. for any man detected teaching the children obscene words; a fine of 1d. for any man waiting without a trencher, or who is absent a meal; for any one breaking any of the butler's glass, 12d.; a fine of 2d. for any one who has not laid the table for dinner by half-past ten, or the supper by six; a fine of 4d. for any one absent a day without leave; for any man striking another, a fine of 1d.; for any follower visiting the cook 1d.; a fine of 1d. for any man appearing in a foul shirt, broken hose, untied shoes, or torn doublet; a fine of 1d. for any stranger's room left for four hours after he be dressed; a find of 1d. if the hall be not cleansed by eight in the morning in winter and seven in summer; the porter to be fined 1d. if the court gate be not shut during meals; a fine of 3d. if the stairs be not cleaned every Friday after dinner. All these fines were deducted by the steward at the quarterly payment of the men's wages.

The men who do things maturely, slowly, deliberately, are the men who oftenest succeed in life. People who are habitually in a hurry have to do things twice over. The tortoise beats the hare at last.

There is no better test of purity and true goodness than reluctance to think evil of one's neighbor, and absolute incapacity to believe an evil report about good men, except upon the most trustworthy evidence.

Importance of Roads.

We are not aware that any estimate has ever been made of the actual cost of the public roads of the United States, or that the expense of providing them has ever been attempted by any bureau of statistics, but we make the rough estimate that they have cost at least seven hundred million dollars—probably much more—while unknown millions are annually expended in attempting to keep them in repair. If the money were only well applied, it would be an expenditure of great profit and economy, as everything which the farmer does off his own land is greatly affected by their condition. All his many loads of surplus farm products are drawn over them, and it makes some difference to him and to his horses whether those loads are conveyed easily over hard, smooth surfaces, or dragged through mud and against stones with severe labor to the team, fatigue to the driver, and wear and breakage to the waggon. Every week he and his family, more or less, go to the village for numberless errands, or to church on the Sabbath, and the good or bad condition of the roads seems to affect every fiber, pleasantly or unpleasantly, of their feeling or nervous sensations. On an average, there is at least twenty miles of travelling each week for the members of a single family. It would make a difference of five dollars a week, everything counted, whether this teaming and travelling is done over a nice, comfortable road, or through mud holes, sloughs, ruts, and unbridged streams, or against stones. Five dollars a week amounts to $250 a year, a snug little sum to tax the farmer with; and when this sum is multiplied by at least five million owners or drivers of horses, carriages, waggons, heavy teams, etc., the aggregate cost would be something over a billion dollars! Does any one say this is too large an estimate? Then proceed to detail and show in what particulars; but do not blindly and ignorantly say it is wrong without careful examination. Suppose, however, we admit that it is double the reality, is not the six hundred millions every year, expended directly or indirectly by our people, worthy of more attention on the part of patriots, statesmen, politicians, office-seekers, public spirited men, writers for newspapers, agricultural journalists, and in fact of every one who passes over a road?

So long as our public highways in most parts of the country are made and repaired with so little interest and so little thought, we must suffer an enormous loss. We would like to ask how many of our readers, who drive or ride over the common roads, never see a loose stone, or a fixed stone, to strike, jolt and batter every passing wheel, or who do not see hundreds of them which might be removed with the expenditure of a small portion of the road tax? How many never saw sods and muck scraped into the road bed, to form a highway or "turnpike," which would be excellent for corn and potatoes, but which when worked into a mass of mud, or cut into ruts a foot deep, constitute a strange object to be called a "road?" How many never saw along the roadsides, thrifty patches of thistles, burdocks, mullein John's wort, nettles, etc., etc., ready to seed all the neighbors' fields? Until we can find such happy persons in the majority, we hope more attention may be given to correcting these evils, although we would not lessen the praiseworthy attention which is now freely accorded to enterprises and interests of almost infinitely less importance, but good in their small way.—Country Gentleman.

Who Discovered the Electric Transmission of Speech?

A book of absorbing public interest is announced shortly to appear in England and this country—a history of the telephone of Johann Philipp Reis, with a biographical sketch of its inventor, by Prof. Sylvanus P. Thompson. It establishes beyond honest doubt or question, by historical evidence, by the reproduction of original documents and illustrations, and by the public records of scientific bodies, that Philipp Reis discovered the electric transmission of speech in 1860-61, that he elaborately described and exhibited his telephone in 1861; that he invented transmitting and receiving instruments, which not only talked and talk now, but which include the essential principles of the transmitters and receivers now in use; and that he manufactured, placed on the market, and sold his instruments in 1863, for the purpose of illustrating the electric transmission of speech and song. That an invention so important, made in the heart of Germany, should not have been instantly perfected and utilized would surprise us in this country, if history did not abundantly teach that inventions complete in themselves often lie sterile until the favorable season and soil are found for their commercial adoption and development.—Dr. W. F. Channing, in Popular Science Monthly.

An English Beauty.

Another newly-discovered English beauty is thus described in the correspondence of the Philadelphia Telegraph:

"Keswick, in Cumberland, can boast of one charming possession in the shape of the prettiest woman in England. She is a barmaid at the Nelson Wine Vaults in that town. Her name is Edith Twentyman, and she is reported to be as good and modest as she is beautiful. She has the gorgeous milk and roses complexion that is so rarely seen outside of England, united to splendid eyes, full, dark, and lustrous as those of a gazelle, pearly teeth, regular features, with rich dark hair growing low on the brow, and a figure whose fine outlines were not to be concealed by the cut of her country-made gown. She is simply dazzling, and how such a pearl of beauty has been left hidden in this quiet little town is to me a marvel. She is well educated, I am told, paints in water-colors, and is perfectly free from all traces of vanity or self-consciousness. Had she been born a Frenchwoman, she would, ere this, have dazzled the public in some mute role in one of the great spectacular pieces of the day. As it is, she will probably follow the example of her elder sister, who was as beautiful as she, and who married a good honest fellow in her own station of life, and is now a comfortable matron, with a houseful of children."

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—The Daily Sentinel, which is the leading morning paper of this state, writes: "St. Jacobs Oil, the wonderful remedy for rheumatism, has been used by a large number of people in this city, and with effect truly marvelous."

Advice to Consumptives.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs:—therefore use the great anti-scrofula, or blood purifier and strength-restorer,—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to Cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. For Dr. Pierce's pamphlet on consumption, send two stamps to WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

No better heritage can one possess than cheerfulness.

Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" is everywhere acknowledged to be the standard remedy for female complaints and weaknesses. It is sold by druggists.

The strength of criticism lies only in the weakness of the thing criticised.

Impotency of mind, limb or vital function, nervous weakness, sexual debility, etc, cured by WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y. Address, with two stamps, for pamphlet.

Sorrow is not selfish, but many persons are in sorrow entirely selfish.

It is now in season to warn our readers against the sudden attacks of Cholera, Cramp Colic, and the various Bowel Complaints incident to the season of ripe fruit, vegetables, etc. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the grand specific for those troubles. (2)

"When all other remedies fail" for Bowel Complaint, Colic, Cramps, Dysentery, etc., "Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry comes to the rescue." Thus writes W. H. Crooker, druggist, Waterdown, and adds that "its sales are large and increasing." (6)

The Sting Within.

It is said there is a rankling thorn in every heart, and yet that none would exchange their own for that of another. To be impatient at the death of a person concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was born an angel.

Advice is seldom welcome but when we advise you to use Carboline we know that the results will at least be welcome to you, as thousands of baldheads will testify to.

These two things, contradictory as they may seem, must go together—manly dependence and manly independence, manly reliance and manly self-reliance.

A wise ruler regards the root; he knows the root and all else grows out of it. The root is piety; the fruit, brotherly love.

Preparing Fruit for Market.

"Farmers are cheats," we heard a city ...mark the other day. "I do not buy ...et of strawberries that has not the ...and biggest on top, and when the peach ...comes, I get a dozen or two of fine ...es at the top, while the rest of the ...is filled with small, green and gnarled ...they are all cheats." We con- ...that all the cheating, in strawberries ..., was not done by the farmers. That ...a much "deaconing" (the market ...for topping) of peaches and other ...we do not doubt, yet the tendency is ...the other direction. Take peach- ..., for example, those who are regular- ...ize business, and expect to continue it, ...to make their brand upon a crate or ...a guarantee of honest packing. In packing ..., the first point should be to assort ..., making as many grades as the cond- ...of the fruit requires. When brought ...e packing shed, the fruit is at once ...spread in the shade, in order that it ...cool as much as possible. In assorting, ...that are at all soft are put aside, to be ...at home; then two or three qualities, ..., firsts and seconds, are made, and ...the best growers, the packages of each ...alike all through. It is allowable to ...the colored sides of the top layer upper- ...most, in order that the fruit may appear at ...best, but not to select large specimens ...the top layer. The fruit-grower, who ex- ...pects to continue in the business, can not ...afford to pack his fruit dishonestly.

Saving Seed Corn.

The growing of good, sound seed corn, ...will yield a maximum crop, properly ...for a year beforehand in the shaping of ...the character of the seed. Therefore select ...seed for 1884 and 1885 from the ears ...growing in the field, and give it ...special care. As a rule, any thrifty farmer ...can raise better seed than he can buy, and it ...should be in his programme every year to give ...personal attention to the growing of his ...seed corn. There is money in it. The ...average yield of Indian corn for the whole ...country is not far from twenty-five bushels to ...the acre, and the total yield sometimes reaches ...one billion seven hundred million bushels. ...With the best husbandry, which means ...good seed, good soil, manure and tillage, it ...is difficult to raise seventy-five bushels ...to the acre. If fine, sound seed corn, with a ...good pedigree, would add only ten per cent. ...to the yield of this crop, it would increase ...the annual yield one hundred and seventy ...million bushels, worth eighty-five million ...dollars. Every thinking farmer must see ...that he has a money interest in securing ...good seed corn, and in knowing just what ...he plants. He is suffering loss every year, ...chiefly from want of a little timely at- ...tention to this matter. He uses unsound ...corn, possibly for seed, selects from the corn ...crib the best he can find, or borrows from a ...neighbor as careless as himself about the ...seed that he plants. A part of the corn ...rots in the field, and he has to plant over, ...which makes extra expense. The late ...planted corn is caught by the frost, and ...suffers in the large proportion of ...soft corn that he harvests. The stover is ...not well cured for fodder, and the cattle ...eat this mouldy mass. Heredity counts ...as much in vegetable as in animal life. ...To get maximum crops, you must have ...seed perfect after its kind, with the normal ...quantity of starch, gluten, oil, and other ...constituents that belong to it. The plant ...must be well fed, cultivated, and ripened in ...its appropriate season to mature this kind of ...seed. We say, then, select your ears for ...seed corn, as they stand upon the stalk, ...in August or September—perfect ears, well ...capped. Put a string upon them, or some ...mark, by which they can be identified, and ...let them mature upon the stock. To make ...sure of perfect drying, hang them up in ...bunches upon the south side of a building, ...or in a well ventilated loft, or room with a ...fire in it. The perfect drying of seed corn ...is an important item. The corn should not ...be shelled until the cob is thoroughly dried. ...When you are ready for planting, pour the ...seed corn into a vessel of water, and skim off ...every kernel that floats. That which sinks ...to the bottom of the water is the best, and, ...with suitable conditions of soil and climate, ...will generate and bear fruit after its kind. ...Corn yields very kindly to all intelligent ...efforts to increase its productiveness and im- ...prove its quality. By selecting ears from ...stalks that bear two or more ears, you can ...increase the number of ears. By selecting ...ears of twelve or more rows, you can in- ...crease the number of kernels upon the cob, ...always provided that you give the corn ...plant food enough to do its best in the har- ...vest. Farmers who look carefully after ...their seed corn, and raise seventy-five ...bushels to the acre, do not doubt that it is a ...paying crop.—American Agriculturist.

French-Canadian Peasants.

The French-Canadian peasants are generally rather small, but sturdy, muscular, well-knit. They are dull-looking, but their rather heavy faces are not animal and coarse. Even the young women are very seldom pretty, but they are all wholesome, modest, and unaffected. As they advance in life they become stout, and reach old age with a comfortable and placid expression. The beauty of the race seems to be confined to the children, who are bright, robust, and cherubic. Thus the people are externally unprepossessing, but the more I study them, the more I like them for the quiet courtesy and perfect simplicity of their manners, and their hospitality and unfailing kindness.

Several types of Canadians were there, each standing as a page of the country's history. There was the original Canadian, the peasant of Normandy and Brittany, just as he was when first landed on the shores of the St. Lawrence over two hundred years ago; he has kept his material and mental traits with such extraordinary fidelity that a Canadian travelling now in those parts of France seems to be meeting his own people. He is a small, muscular man of dark complexion, with black eyes, a round head, rather impervious, and an honest face, rather heavy with inertia. He sums up the early days of Canada, when endurance and courage of no ordinary stamp were required to meet the want, the wars, and the hardships of their struggle. And his phenomenal conservatism was not a whit too strong to preserve his nationality after the conquest of Canada by a race having entirely opposite tendencies. There also was the Canadian with Indian blood; he is by no means a feeble element in the population, in either numbers or influence. He is often well marked with Indian features—high cheeks, small black eyes, and slight beard. The most characteristic specimens are called "petits brules," liked burned stumps, black, gnarly, and angular. But now and then you meet large, fine-looking half-breeds, with a swarthy complexion warmed with Saxon blood. There were no women of low character sent to Canada in the early days, as there were to New Orleans and the Antilles; the few women who came sufficed to marry only a small portion of the colonists, so that many of the gallant Frenchmen, and later some of the Scotch and English, engaged in the fur trade, married squaws, and founded legitimate families of half-breeds. Thus Indian blood became a portion of the national body; and the national policy of alliance and religious union with the savages helped the assimilation of Indian traits as well as of Indian blood. There was also the Saxon who had became a Gaul. There are Wrights, Blackburns, McPhersons, with blue eyes and red hair, who can not speak a word of English; and there are Irish tongues rolling off their brogue in French. Some of these strangers to the national body are descendants of those English soldiers who married Canadians and settled here after the conquest. Others are orphans that were taken from some immigrant ships wrecked in the St. Lawrence. But these stragglers from the conquering race are now conquered, made good French Catholics, by the force of their environment, and they are lost as distinctive elements, absorbed in the remarkable homogeneous nationality of the French-Canadian people. The finest type of Canadian peasant is now rare. He is a descendant of the pioneer nobles of France. After the conquest (1763) some of these noble families were too poor to follow their peers back to France; they became farmers; their facilities for education were very limited, and their descendants soon sank to the level of the peasantry about them. But they have not forgotten their birth. They are commanding figures, with features of marked character, and with much of the pose and dignity of courtiers. Some of them, still preserving the traditions of their sires, receive you with the manners a prince might have when in rough disguise.—C. H. FARNHAM, in Harper's Magazine for August.

A Punster's Narrow Escape.

"Mr. Blifkins, I do wish you would give up that abominable practice of punning," said the good old lady to her old man, at breakfast the other morning. "You don't like punning, my dear?' said old B., with affected surprise. "You know very well that I don't. I'd rather have a hedge-hog in the house than a punster." "I see," said the incorrigible punster, "hedge-hog, eh? H'm—hog. Ah, yes—it's for pork-you-pine," and he slipped under the end of the table just in time to dodge the bowl of mush hurled at his head by the now thoroughly exasperated woman.

Keep right on sending your money and old clothes to the heathen. There are only twelve hundred towns west of the Mississippi river without churches or regular preaching of any kind.

Information Wanted.

A City Hall official was about to depart for home and dinner the other day, when a stranger entered and introduced himself as John Linden, and added:

"I presume you are a smart man, or you wouldn't be holding this position. I want to ask you a question or two. You own a horse?"

"No, sir."

"Don't, eh? If you did own one, and he had symptoms of poll evil, what would you do?"

"I can't tell, sir. I am just going to dinner."

"Yes, I know, but I've another question or two. Was Cleopatra a married woman?"

"I don't know, sir."

"Don't you? That's bad, for I've a bet of three to one that you knew all about it. Well, we'll let that pass. Do you think that Shakspeare lived happily with his wife, and is there any truth in the rumor I heard up on Michigan avenue half an hour ago that he hated cats?"

"What do I know about these things!" exclaimed the official. "I am in a hurry, sir!"

"So am I, but wait a minute more. Let's see! Oh, yes, I wanted to ask you if it would be of any use to try to revive a person who had been drowned three days?"

"No, sir!" shouted the official.

"Wouldn't, eh! Sorry for that, for I have a bet of ten to five that it would be. Sit down a minute while I ask you another question. Do you believe that maternal instinct descends to fish worms?"

"I believe you are a crank, sir, and ——!"

"You do, eh? Then I win a bet of twenty to five, and will never cease to be grateful. History tells us of the youth ——."

"I am going home!"

"Certainly, and I'll walk up street with you. History tells us of the youth who fired the Ephesian dome."

"I don't care—I don't care a cent, sir!"

"Yes, but what was his name, and was the dome insured? Did the fire department come out, and was the youth arrested on charge of incendiarism? I want your decision."

"Go away—go off—I don't wan't you!" shouted the official as he tried to out-walk the other.

"You know, don't you?"

"No, sir—no, sir—go 'way from me!"

"You don't? Then I lose a double-barrelled shot-gun on a bet that you did. One more question."

The official rushed for a car and entered it, but the man walked along beside it and looked through the window and said:

"What is meant by the term 'spontaneous outburst?' I have frequently seen it in print, and I thought I'd ask you to explain."

A silver half-dollar changed hands in the car, and a broad-shouldered laborer jumped out and spit on his hands and ran the information-seeker into a hardware store, where he had no sooner recovered his breath than he said to the clerk who came forward:

"I've always thought if I ever got time to call in here I'd ask you if it was true that Henry VIII. invented Saratoga fried potatoes?"

Chinese Courtesies.

The sallow Celestials who gave us "the best letter in the alphabet," who were of old the inventors of the compass, and who, even at the last splendid Paris Exhibition of 1878, astonished and humbled French ingenuity with a wheel-barrow such as no Paris workman had ever seen, altogether surpass us haughty Europeans, it seems, in the humilities at least of social courtesy, if we may judge from the specimens brought home by Mr. Cooper the English traveller. From these it would appear that the greatest politeness between Mongolian fashionables consists in addressing to your friend the most high-flown compliments, which he is expected to receive with a similarly exaggerated humility. Mr. Cooper jotted down the following colloquy he overheard between a citizen of Ki-zan-ki and his friend Chang:—"How does the illustrious and most glorious Chang?" "My miserable carcase is as well as can be expected." "And where have you built your superb and magnificent palace?" "My wretched mud-hut is at Luchan." "Your divinely beautiful family must have increased since we met?" "I have but five ugly, deformed brats." "I trust that the inestimably precious health of your exquisitely charming lady is all you could wish?" "Well, indeed, the disgusting old hag is full of health." After giving this specimen, we feel comment superfluous and improvement hopeless.

A Business Son.

"Yes, ther's a heap o' difference in boys," replied the old man, as he tied up a bag of oats. "There's my son John, for instance. Everybody beats him in a hoss trade, swindles him in the watch dicker, and leaves him out in the cold when he farms on sheers. He's goodhearted, but ther's no bizness about him. If I had to depend upon John I'd die in the poor house."

He wrestled the bag aside, seized another, and continued:

"And there was my son Philip—keen as a razor—eyes wide open, and so sharp that no man in New Jersey dare offer him a pare of old boots for a $300 hoss for fear of being cheated."

"Is he dead?"

"Yes, he's gone and that was the sharpest trick of all. He found he'd got consumption and what did he do but hunt up a life insurance agent, take out a $5,000 policy, give his note for the premium, and come home and fall off a load of hay and run a pitchfork clear through him. Some sons would have hung on and doctored around and wanted currant jelly and chicken soup for eighteen months; but this wasn't Phil. No, sir. He didn't even ask for anything better'n a $20 tombstone, and he said I needn't git that unless the marble-cutter would trade even up for a blind calf."—Wall Street News.

A Safe Risk.

"I want to get my life insured for $10,000," said a southern editor to an insurance agent, "but, to be frank with you, I have accepted a challenge to fight a duel next week. If you care to take the chances you can make out the policy at once.'

"Who is the other man?" asked the agent, as he handed over the papers and pocketed the premium. He was told, and when he went to bed that night he felt that the two policies issued that day were the safest risks he had ever accomplished.—Rochester Post-Express.

Olive Culture in America.

In the August Century, Mrs Bianciardi's illustrated article, "Under the Olives," contains, besides an interesting account of the method of cultivating it in Europe, the following regarding olive culture as an American industry: "The olive has lately acquired for Americans a new and practical interest from the discovery that it can be be easily and profitable grown in California. Residents of California have been accustomed to consider a small bottle of 'Mission oil' for their salad as a treasure; for it far surpasseo in purity and sweetness any imported oil. But it is only within a few years that private owners of land in Southern California have seriously considered the question whether olive culture could be made a paying enterprise. So many possibilities cling to the broad lands and rich soil of the Golden State, that it is not wonderful if some of them have been overlooked. And, though experiments in olive growing have been made on a small scale with good success during the last twenty years, popular interest is only now beginning to be awakened. In the first place, there was the drawback, peculiarly great to the American temperament, of the slowness of growth and irregular productiveness of the olive in Europe. The old Tuscan saying is, 'Plant a vineyard for yourself, an orange grove for your children, and an olive orchard for your grandchildren.' As a people, we are not fond of looking far into the future; and besides, judging from ourselves, we are not at all sure that our grandchildren will wish to live where we do. But the olive is good enought to adapt itself to the rapidity of American demands. It matures much earlier than in Europe, and bears oftener and more plentifully. The system of propagation from cuttings, as far as can be judged at present, gives, in our rich soil, robust trees; and there is no need to employ the slow process of raising them from the seed. Five years is surely not long to wait for a fruit crop; and after that time, according to the best California authorities, the trees will yield a full, and in many cases an annual harvest. At a late meeting of the State Horticultural Society in San Francisco, it was stated that one olive farm yielded $2,200 to the acre. These trees bore every year, and were situated on 'adobe' hill sides, the bottom lands being found, as in Italy, less favorable to the fruit. The variety was the 'Mission olive,' which has not been identified with any of the varieties cultivated in Europe. The olive was introduced into South America in 1560, by Antonio Ribera; but the California trees sprang from trees sent from San Blas in Mexico by Don Joeeph de Galvez with his expedition to rediscover the port of Monterey."

Economy in Dress.

An association, counting among its membership some of the high born ladies of society, has recently been formed in London, whose leading object is to influence public sentiment on the side of economy in dress. The term, of course, is a relative one. It is not to be supposed that its originators purpose to array themselves in prints or ginghams or coarser materials, or to abandon the purchase and use of silk, satins, and velvets, or the delicate and beautiful, if somewhat costly, accessories which are at once the delight and appropriate adornment of woman. No doubt it is too much to expect that women of great wealth should sacrifice their own inclinations for what certain classes migh characterize as great extravagance simply to "set the fashion" for economy for those whose means will not permit them safely to indulge in the same direction. There is really very little to complain of in the so-called "extravagance" of ladies whose unlimited means enable them to dress always in costly attire; economy, then, is really to be preached only to those women who, through envy, or vain desire to appear what they are not, bend every energy and make every sacrifice to compete with, if not to excel, their friends more favored of fortune. This is folly and extravagance which needs a society with more eloquence, nerve and power than Providence has ever yet vouchsafed to mortals; for when a vain and fashionable woman, with an inward desire for luxury and display (sad be it to chronicle!), once resolves to compete with her more wealthy women friends in dress and style, why then dynasties may fall, empires may crumble into dust, "societies" for the prevention of criminal extravagance may organize, pass resolutions, and take "notes" to the end of the chapter, but rich raiment will that woman have while there is a dollar in the till.

Bequeathing His Heart.

Kraszewski is a man of ample means, living in good style in his own villa in Dresden and besides the handsome income which his writings bring him, he receives large supplies from his son, who is one of the greatest contractors in Russia. His villa is situated in one of those picturesque spots for which Dresden is famous, and the exterior alone shows the peculiar tastes of its owner, the balcony outside his study being fitted up as an aviary for doves, and the surrounding gardens beautifully laid out, in a great measure by his own hand. In his waiting-room numerous articles of vertu are scattered about, most of which were presented to him on his literary jubilee in 1879. In his study the walls are literally covered with landscapes, sketched by the poet himself during his long travels; and on the tables there are albums of caricatures with which he has amused himself in his leisure moments. For some time past he has been oppressed by some occasional fits of melancholy, during which he sits for hours and hours engaged in composing music. Before leaving for Pau, as with some presentiment of coming evil, he made a will, for the first time in his life, in which he directed that his heart should be taken to Warsaw and deposited in the church where he received his first communion.—London Life.

Texas has furnished some tall stories lately. A few months ago an account was telegraphed from that State of the fall of a meteoric stone which covered a whole acre of ground. Now we are informed that the skeletons of five persons have been found sitting bolt upright in a carriage under a tree which had been struck by lightning. Lightning plays so many strange tricks that hardly any story of its doings can be too wonderful for belief, but readers of this Texan story are likely to be shy of it for a few days when they recall the meteoric stone yarn.

Cowardly: It was rather cowardly in the apoplexy to strike a little fellow like Tom Thumb.

A citizen who lives at the end of an elevated line says there is at least one great advantage—he never get carried beyond his station.

Inveterate poker players may be both modest and sad. They have been known to show evidence of a flush, and sometimes to give out ace-high.

"Ma, is Long Branch an awful dirty place?" "Why, no, my child—what made you think so?" "Why, here's an advertisement that says it is washed by the tide twice a day."

Soyer, the great French cook, used to chew garlic and breath on a salad to give it a flavor. In America the boarders chew the salad awhile and then go to head quarters and blow on the cook.

"Ma!" screamed a little boy on Lexington avenue yesterday, "I ain't a going to play with Tommy Miller any more." "Ain't going to play with who?" "Tommy Miller." "Why?" "'Cause he won't play with me."

Explicit: Scene—An humble country hotel. Male guest: "I'd like to be called at 4 to-morrow morning; I'm going fishing." "Female domestic (stupidly); "Eh?" Male guest (deliberately): "I'm going fishing to-morrow morning, and I wish to be called early—not later than 4." Female domestic (stolidly): "Will you ring?"

Dissolute Hibernian: "Why don't I go to wurruk, is it?" Sure, it's a pathriot oi am; an' is it meself that 'ud be afther wurrukin to help kape the Saxon? Not a bit av it! Wudn't ye advoise me to go to Amerikey, now?" Industrious Hibernian: "Well, I don't know that I would, Mickey. I don't owe the Yankees any grudge, d'ye see?"

Somebody put a small mud-turtle, about the size of a silver dollar, in a bed at a new Jersey hotel, and the stranger who was assigned to that room, on preparing to retire, caught sight of it. He at once resumed his clothes, remarking: "I expected to have a pretty lively night of it, but if they're as big as that I don't propose to get in with 'em."

"Complimentary: "What sorter pictur' do you call that?" asked an Arkansas farmer, pointing to a terra cotta bust of Charles Dickens. "That is a bust of Charles Dickens." "Intended to look like him, ain't it?" "Oh, yes!" "Wall, I can sympathize with him, for I lived in the swamps a long time myself. Zouns, how bilious he must have been when the thing was tuck."

College students don't please as table waiters. When you call one a miserable jackass for spilling the soup down your back and giving you a salt-cellar filled with sugar, he of course can't answer back, as it is against the rules of the hotel, but he can say something to another waiter in Greek which you can't understand, but which you feel sure is horrible abuse of yourself, and it's awful maddening.

Vicarious Benevolence.

An editorial in the August Century calls attention to the abuse of asking outsiders to do your own charity giving. It says: "It is beautiful to see how quickly the promptings of this new kind of charity spring into the mind when any human need arises. The first thought of most men seems to be not 'How much can we do towards relieving this need?' but rather 'How much can we get other people to do?' Each man begins to think of other men who can be induced to contribute; each neighborhood looks, at once, beyond its own borders to other neighborhoods upon which it may confer the blessedness of bearing its burdens. Mr. Hale's motto, 'Look out and not in,' finds in this habit one of its most striking illustrations; for when there are contributions to be made the modern philanthropist begins at once to look out for contributors, and not to look into his own pocket at all.

"If there is a church debt to pay, a hospital to build, an orphanage to found, immediately the thoughts of those who stand nearest to the project, and who are to be most deeply benefited by it, are turned to distant places, inquiring how they may obtain this good thing at the smallest possible cost to themselves. Those benevolent gentlemen who have had large experience in the work of raising church debts testify that the people who have contracted these debts and are responsible for their payment are almost always well content to sit and wait, in the expectation that other people, somewhere and somehow, will lift their burden for them."

The Ages of Royalty.

The following statement of the ages of various monarchs, ranged from the oldest to the youngest, may prove interesting: The Emperor of Germany, aged 86; the King of the Netherlands, aged 66; the King of Denmark, aged 65; the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, aged 64; the King of Wurtemburg, aged 60; the Emperor of Brazil, aged 57; the King of Saxony, aged 55; the King of Sweden and Norway, aged 54; the Emperor of Austria, aged 52; the King of the Belgians, aged 48; the King of Portugal, aged 44; the King of Roumania, aged 44; the Sultan of Turkey, aged 40; the King of Italy, aged 39; the Emperor of Russia, aged 38; the King of Bavaria, aged 37; the King of the Hellenes, aged 37; the King of Servia, aged 28; and the King of Spain, aged 25.

MARKDALE, AUGUST 2ND 1883.

TERRIBLE EARTAQUAKE.

The island of Ischia, near the coast of Italy in the vicinity of Mount Vesuvius, was on Saturday night visited by a tremendous earthquake, which levelled almost every building on the Island, and the number of people who perished is now placed at five thousand. The Volcano of Veauvius appears to be in a very active state of eruption at present, and a large stream of lava is approaching a village situated at the foot of the mountain. The number of people and cattle killed by the earthquake, is so great that searching for bodies had to be discontinued on account of the exhalations.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. Thos. Davis, Artemesia has erected this season a fine brick residence, and Wm. McLoughry of the adjoining farm has built a large frame barn. This line on which the above farmers live is going ahead fast, it is in fact one of the finest tracts of land in the country. There is important improvements going on throughout the neighborhood, and in driving through the country one cannot but be favorably impressed with the general aspect of the district. The number of large frame barns and brick houses are being increased year by year, and the well cultivated fields enclosed with good fences gives the country a comfortable and prosperous appearance.

THE TORONTO GREY & BRUCE.

PASSED OVER TO THE CANADA PACIFIC.

At a meeting of the Toronto Grey & Bruce Railway Directors in Toronto last Thursday, papers were signed for a lease of the road to the Ontario & Quebec (Canada Pacific Railway) for 999 years for $140.000 a year. What effect this important change will have on the local stations along the line is very hard to tell. We have always held that the longer the road remained independent the better it would be for local places, inasmuch, as when a highway Co. is more interested in through traffic than in local, we may rest assured, the company will pay greater attention to that which interests them most, and for which special care is necessary in order to make it secure, while local wants are often neglected and freights raised. Be this as it may, one thing is certain, the road will be kept thoroughly equipped and run in a first class manner, being managed by, perhaps, the most gigantic railway company in the world, and a link of the great highway between the Atlantic and Pacific. These facts will certainly bring the line into prominence, as well as the country through which it passes. Owen Sound will be on the "high horse", as this change will open a new era for that place which will derive a vast benefit therefrom, and will, doubtless, in the near future be one of the cities of the Dominion. The management of the road changed hands on Wednesday Aug. 1st, so that the long looked for change has come suddenly at last, which caused quite a stir among the agents along the line in making up their books and putting things in ship shape generally. Not much change is expected among the officials at present.

CELEBRATED TROTTING STOCK BURNED AT ORANGEVILLE.

Orangeville, July 31.—A fire occurred about 9.30 p. m in the brick stables of the Gordon House occupied by Mr. J. E Booth. The fire got ahead inside before anything was known of it, and notwithstanding the efforts of the people and water-works it was found impossible to save the contents and building. The loss is as follows: The well known trotting horse General Beamish, Belonged to Messrs Middleton, Stubbs & Booth, for which a short time since they refused $3,000, was burned. The trotting horse Highland, jr. belonged to Mr. Booth, for which he was offered $2,000, was destroyed. He also lost a chesnut mare valued at $200, and other valuables. A valuable span of horses and buggy, the property of Mr. Burdridge, of Sand Pit, were burnt, valued at $450. Mr. Perdue, veterinary surgeon lost his horse buggy, and stock of drugs, worth about $300. There was also destroyed a horse and phaeton belonging to Dr. Pattullo, of Brampton, value about $300. Mr. Stafford, of Acton, drove a horse and buggy into the stables about three-quarters of an hour before the alarm was given, which were burnt; loss about $300. The damage to buildings is about $700. The insurance is only small. It is probable an inquest will be held to enquire into the cause of the fire.

Markdale, Ju'y 30th, '83.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR:

I thought I would hand you a letter which I received from Mr. MacRae, Reeve of Glenelg, kindly notifying me of reports circulated against me, which you will kindly publish and oblige yours truly.

THOS. MULLARKY,
Dep-Reeve, Glenelg.

Glenelg, 27th July, 1883.

Mr Thomas Mullarky, Deputy Reeve of Glenelg, Markdale.

DEAR SIR:

It is currently circulated throughout the Township, greatly to your injury as a public man, that your reports of amounts expended and paid by you to some of the road contractors, last year are incorrect as printed in the Auditor's report for 1882. On hearing of such reports I felt it to be my duty to let you know that such are in circulation, so that you may have an opportunity at once to put yourself right before the public, knowing, as I think I do, that the steps I have taken will be appreciated by you. Yours respectfully,

FINLAY MACRAE,
Reeve, Glenelg.

FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA.

New Westminster, B. C., July 15th, '83.

MR. EDITOR,

Your correspondent having transported himself to British Columbia, desires to send you a few lines for the benefit of your readers who may have a desire to immigrate to this country. New Westminster is a smart little place with a population of about 3,000, and I should judge from appearances that about one qurater of the population is composed of that curse to any country (the Chinese). Now I wish you distinctly to remember that what I write is entirely my present impression drawn from what I see and know. The town is seventy-five miles from Victoria, and the scenery along the route from there to this place is simply delightful. The timber here—well don't say anything about yours. Just think of trees eight and ten feet across the stump, and 200 to 300 feet high. A man must be big hearted to face them. No thank you! I cannot undertake to clear a farm here, and as far as I see at present it is a dull prospect, yet, people have piles of money. Farming ought to pay as eggs are worth 50 to 60 cents per dozen, butter 30 to 35 cents, and everything else high. Wages are not so good as they used to be. Common labor ranges from $2.50 to $3 per day. For girls this the country—they get from $20 to $25 a month, but is cheaper to marry than hire them, and this is often resorted to.

Since I have seen the salmon canning process I beg to be excused from dining on them any more. I simply say to any one thinking of coming here that it is not advisable, unless they have some immediate prospect in view of some kind of work or acquaintances. Your correspondent had the good fortune to meet with an old friend from Artemesia, S. Knight, who gave him a right hearty and friendly welcome. He is delighted with this country, perhaps I may think better of it after a while also.

I received a very friendly letter at San Francisco from a distinguished townsman of yours, which had been opened by two persons of the same name, so they must be very plentiful. My trip across the country I must leave over for some other time. From Chicago to California along the line of railway is a vast wilderness for a considerable portion of the road, inhabited by deer, rabbits, cayottes, prairie dogs and Indians. The white population should have left to nature.

And now let me tell you that the difficulties of running a railway from Flesherton via Eugenia to Meaford would be laughed at by American engineering skill. If you saw the huge mountain gorges or canyons on this route you would conclude that we Canadians were easily scared when talking of a valley R. R. Time forbids saying any more at present. Yours truly,

The Editor of the Flesherton Advance is whining like a whipped cur, We decline to follow him in detail, as he appears under various forms and different names. SHEEP WORRIED.—Mr. Thos. Anderson of Glenelg had his sheep attacked by dogs on Tuesday night last and eleven of the flock were killed. The dogs were persued until they entered the woods, when they were lost sight of. It is a wonder to us that so many dogs are kept, the great majority of which are worse than useless. Mr. Anderson's loss is heavy.

The Methodist S. S. Pic-nic came off on Tuesday, in Mr. Geo. Walker's bush. This place is convenient and well suited for such occasions. There was a good turn out and a pleasant time spent. The air was quite cool in the shade, yet a barrel of lemonade was disposed of gratuitously. The table was laden with an abundance of good things which also disappeared rapidly about half past five. The sports consisted in swinging, croquet, foot races and various other amusement.

Remember the cattle fair in Markdale on Saturday next. As grass-fed beeves are plentiful now and some good drovers will be on hand there should be a good turn out.

FUN FOR THE BOYS.—Quite a number of boys were indulging in that healthy and exhilarating sport of taking a bath at McFarland's pond last evening, and were having a good time generally. But, it appears a woman living in the vicinity took umbrage at the proceedings, and slipping down to the edge of the pond with feline cautiousness, suddenly dumped the discarded garments of the boys into the pond Perhaps the boys did not feel like putting her in clothes and all, and perhaps they did? However, they went home, some wet, some shirtless, some shoeless and all muttering imprications if the performance was ever repeated. Better be carefull old woman!

Acting under instructions from the Ontario Government, R. W. Phipps, of Toronto, has issued a valuable report on the necessity of preserving and replanting our forests. The urgency of this necessity can best be understood when it is stated that whereas all Ontario was one vast forest a century ago now only about one-third of the area (exclusive of the new districts) is covered with trees. The impending scarcity of fuel and building timber is not the only danger threatened; the great danger ahead is the effect which will undoubtedly be produced on the climate and soil by the disappearance of our forests. Mr. Phipps has devoted a great deal of time to the study of his subject and has collected a vast mass of information bearing on it. Copies of his report could doubtless be had on application to the Hon. Jas. Young, Provincial Treasurer, Toronto, and the time occupied in its perusal will be profitably spent.

Price, in sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands o every youth and every man in the land.

VARIATIONS FROM "NORMA."

"Can you never be serious?" she says, earnestly; "do you not see that what is play to you may be almost death to me?"

"Who told you it was play to me?"

"It never can be anything else," she answers very sadly.

"Lily, you know that I mean to make you my wife——"

"And you know that such a thing can never come to pass," she cries almost wildly; "think of the gap that divides me from you; of the difference between us; of your mother's anger. No, no, it is impossible. You yourself would regret it in a week. I will never bring humiliation upon you, nor be the cause of dissension between you and your family; let me go, Sir Edgar, and for pity's sake be manly enough to leave me in peace for the future."

"You are, for a small woman with antelope-like eyes, the most obstinate specimen of your sex I have ever come across," answers Sir Edgar, half-laughing, half-vexed, drawing her nearer to him.

She trembles and shivers beneath his strong hands.

"Please—please!" she entreats in a terrified whisper. "If any one should tell your mother——"

"Who on earth is to tell, you silly little woman? Who is it you are frightened of?"

"I am frightened of Maud."

"Of Maud? A child like that—pooh."

"Indeed, she is less of a child than you think; she sees everything; even now I feel as if she may be listening at the door. Please let me go. Oh! Edgar—Edgar!"

In her terror and agitation she drops the "Sir," which always offends him so mightily; he laughs triumphantly, and draws her once more upon his breast.

"So you won't be my wife, Lily?"

"No."

"Then I shall go on asking you till you consent, and I shall go on kissing you whenever I get the chance."

She is quite quiet now, lying for a few delirious seconds at peace within his arms whilst he rains down kisses upon her flower-like face. At her heart she does not believe that he means more than to while away a few idle hours with her; she does not credit him with very good intentions towards her, for she has knocked about the world a good deal, and she has learnt to disbelieve in the vows that men make to friendless and penniless girls, who are but waifs upon life's stream. She tells herself, even as she suffers his caresses, that he is in all probability false and fickle like all other men; but even while she is thinking it she is happy, for she loves him, and when he kisses her she is weak enough to be glad of it. She has told him that she will not enter into any engagement with him, because, knowing how great is the social distance between them, she does not believe he would ever honestly perform any engagement towards her; and yet, believing this of him, she is not strong enough to help being happy in his presence, or to forbid him from taking the conviction of her love by force from her trembling lips.

And as she rests thus happy for one brief instant in his embrace the door behind them softly opens, and then closes again rapidly; but not before Maud, coming back ready dressed for her walk, has been treated to a full view of the governess reclining in the arms of her eldest brother.

Maud retires hurriedly into the passage. She is genuinely horrified, but also unfeignedly delighted.

What a delicious little piece of scandal to tell mamma when she comes home! is this young lady's gleeful thought, and she feels quite proud and puffed up with self-importance at the idea of being able to relate such a flagrant breach of propriety on the part of her governess.

She waits, however, till her brothers and sisters come down, and then all four children come into the school-room together, by which time Miss Finch is putting away the lesson-books, and Sir Edgar Dyson is standing discreetly at the farther side of the table.

"Dear me! aren't you ready Miss Finch?" says Maud, with prim displeasure. "I thought you would have been dressed long ago"

"I am going directly, Maud. I shall not be a minute," murmurs Lily, apologetically.

"Who can this be coming up the drive?" cries Willie, who is dancing about by the window.

Lily looks up.

"I am afraid," she says quietly, "that you children will have to go out by yourselves this morning, for here is mamma come to see me."

"Yes, it's Mrs. Finch, and Mr. Allingham is with her. Perhaps he has brought me the marbles he has promised me," says Tom.

"Very likely," says Lily, smiling, and trying to look as if she were pleased.

But Sir Edgar Dyson mutters a very naughty word below his breath, and makes his escape from the school-room hurriedly, with a brow as black as a thunder-cloud.

CHAPTER IX.

THE TURNIP MACHINE.

Mrs. Finch comes into the school-room at Barfield by a side door, Norman Allingham making his way round to the front of the house to join Sir Edgar in his library.

Maud and the younger ones just stop to shake hands with their governess's mother, and then they take themselves off out of doors into the garden.

Mrs. Finch is in the habit of coming over from Wrexham once a week to visit her daughter. Directly, it was through Mrs. King's kind offices that Lily obtained her situation in Lady Dyson's family; but, indirectly, Mrs. Finch had worked and schemed for it secretly for a long time, for Mrs. Finch thought there was a good deal more to be done in this part of the world by a pretty girl, with a clever mother to put her up to things, than the mere teaching of geography and history to four awkward and uninteresting children.

"So Lady Dyson is away, I hear," says Mrs. Finch, as she unties her bonnet-strings, and responds, somewhat coldly, to her daughter's kiss.

"Yes, she went up to town yesterday, but she is to be back to-morrow morning."

"Well, I think it will be a goood opportunity for you to come over to Wrexham with me to spend the afternoon. You can easily give the children a half-holiday.'

"I think I had rather not leave them whilst Lady Dyson is away, mamma. Another day will do quite as well for me to come."

"No; that is just what another day will not do. These French cousins are coming to Wrexham—one of them has telegraphed to say she will arrive to-night. It is your last chance."

"My last chance of what, mamma?'

"Why, you foolish child, of getting Norman to yourself. Who knows what harm this girl may do when she comes."

"But I don't at all want to get Norman to myself," answers Lily smiling. "And, indeed, I had much rather not come to-day. I don't think Sir Edgar——"

"What on earth has Sir Edgar to do with it?" cries the mother, sharply. "I hope, Lily, you are not such an utter goose as to fancy that he is likely to take any notice of you."

Poor Lily crimsons painfully, and looks down in silence.

"Now, Lily, if you have been silly enough to allow your thoughts to dwell upon Sir Edgar, I shall be very angry with you indeed," continues her mother. "Did I not warn you when first you came here to keep out of the way of those two men? All the Dysons are alike. Why, Walter Dyson is a regular black sheep; they say he makes love to every woman he meets and then ill-treats her; then he cannot speak a word of truth."

"Well, mamma," said Lily half-laughing, "I don't see why you should scold me about him. Why, he has been in Paris for more than three months; he has only been at Barfield twice since I have been here. I have hardly ever spoken to him."

"I have only mentioned him to show you what sort of men they are, and the character they bear. His brother is just as bad—false and deceitful."

"That I am sure he is not!" cried Lily, indignantly, blushing furiously.

Her mother looked at her sharply.

"If you have been so foolish as to allow Sir Edgar to flirt with you, Lily, you have done a very silly thing, and my advice to you is to put a stop to it at once. He will make you pretty speeches, and flatter you; he may even presume to kiss you; but he will never woo you honestly nor make you his wife. Child, I knew the Dysons before you were born; I knew their father. They are all alike."

And Mrs. Finch had reason to speak as she did; for years ago, before her heart had grown hard, or her life had become turned into the miserable groove of mercenary cunning which was now her only object, she, too, had been a governess at Carfield to a Miss Dyson, now dead and gone, and there had been fair and false words spoken to her in that very room by Sir Edgar's father—words that had spoilt and altered her whole life. It was no wonder that she hated his sons!

As to Lily, she was almost in tears. At her heart she believed that her mother was right, and that Sir Edgar meant nothing serious by the fine words and caresses which she, alas! had been weak enough to allow; but it was hard to be warned against him, and to be told how false he was.

"If you have anything to tell me about him, Lily, you had better make a clean breast of it at once," said the mother.

"I have nothing to tell you about him," she answered slowly. Not for worlds would she have confided her poor little story to her mother.

Mrs. Finch thought it best not to pursue the subject.

"Very well," she said, "I am glad of it. For instead of wasting vain thoughts on Sir Edgar, you will be doing far better if you turn your attention to Norman Allingham, who is a good, honest fellow, and will really be far better off than Sir Edgar, who is but a poor man after all, with a mother and a whole family of brothers and sisters on his hands. Now, Norman would never make up to any woman unless he meant to her to be his wife."

"Mamma, I don't care in the very least for Norman Allingham, and I am quite sure he does not care for me."

"If so, it is because you have neglected every opportunity you have had. I am determined that you shall marry him."

Poor Lily looked as frightened as if her mother had had a licence ready drawn up in her pocket, and was prepared to marry her out of hand to Mr. Allingham, with or without his consent, within the next hour.

"If you will do as I tell you, and leave everything to me, I will manage the whole business for you, Lily."

"But mamma, I would rather do anything than marry him. Indeed I don't want to marry anybody; I am very happy as I am," said poor Lily, piteously clasping her hands together; for it was shocking to her more refined and delicate mind that her mother should deliberately plan to capture a husband for her. But before she had time to plead her dismay and dislike to the whole scheme, the door opened, and the two young men entered.

"You must come down to the farm and see my new machine for chopping turnips," said the baronet cheerily, shaking hands with Mrs. Finch. "All the children are coming, and your daughter has said she will come too."

"Thank you, Sir Edgar; but I am thinking of taking my daughter back to Wrexham this afternoon," answered Mrs. Finch, rather stiffly.

"Oh! but there is plenty of time for you to come round by the farm first; indeed, I cannot take a refusal."

Edgar Dyson had a pleasant, winning manner—it was almst impossible for Mrs. Finch to decline the expedition.

Sir Edgar did not, however, gain much by the proposed walk. The four children went on in front; Lily, out of modesty, shrank behind; whilst Norman, with an easy familiarity, took his place by her side, so that the baronet was perforce obliged to walk before them, with Mrs. Finch for his companion—an arrangemen which, much as that lady herself approved of it, was hardly to his own satisfaction.

Norman and Lily walked on for some minutes in silence.

They had not much to say to each other; thep saw each other frequently, and they called each other by their Christian names. There was a sort of cousinship between them which warranted the familiarity, the defunct Mr. Finch having been a second cousin of old Mr. King's. Norman thought Lily a dear, sweet-tempered little thing, without much to say for herself; Lily liked Norman because he was kind to herself, and took pains to be more civil to her mother than his grandfather was, otherwise she thought very little about him. There never had been the slightest symptom of love-making between them.

"So your cousins from France are coming to live at Wrexham, I hear," said Lily, at length, more for the sake of something to say than because she took any particular interest in the unknown Miss Kings.

"Yes, one of them arrives to-night."

'Is she pretty?' asked Lily listlessly, with her eyes fixed upon Sir Edgar's broad back in front of her.

A sudden flush swept over Norman's fair face; but Lily did not see this because she was considering deeply whether she would ever have strength of mind enough to prevent the baronet from behaving to her as though he were her lover. Something, however, in Norman's voice, as he answered her, made her look up at him.

"She is more than pretty, she is lovely," he said slowly.

"Oh! I am very glad of that," answered Lily heartily. "You like her, of course?"

"No; I don't think anybody could like her," answered Norman coldly. Lily opened her eyes. "Because," he continued, "she has what is a fatal blot upon any woman's beauty and charm—a terrific temper.'

"Really? what a pity!" said Lily, with some interest.

"A bad-tempered woman is like a distorted flower; nothing can be more repulsive to meet with than mortal ugliness where one expects to find nothing but beauty and harmony. I think a man, whose wife has a violent and ill-controlled disposition, is very much to be pitied. You, Lily," turning suddenly to her, with a smile, "you have the sweetest temper I have ever met with; I have often noticed it and admired it."

Lily blushed a little with a vague sense of uneasiness, and turned slightly away.

"I am sorry your cousin is so unamiable," she said, to divert the conversation from herself; "and the other one?"

"I have never seen Cecily, and she is not coming to Wrexham just yet," he answered, rather shortly.

Truth to say, the whole subject of his two cousins was rather distasteful to Norman just now. He was angry with Cecily for not coming, and angry also with Stella for coming alone; for, in spite of his indignant condemnation of her temper, he knew that at heart her beauty would very probably disturb his peace. And then Norman was angry with his grandfather for limiting his choice of a wife to these two sisters, and was half-disposed to determine that he would marry Lily or any other girl whom he might meet, if only he could throw every other consideration to the winds and follow his own fancy in the matter. Not that he cared about Lily, only she was neither Stella whom he had seen, and who troubled his dreams; nor yet Cecily, whom he had not seen, but who seemed to take a malicious pleasure in avoiding his presence.

"What business had she to stay in France when he wanted her in England," he said to himself irritably. And, for the time, both the sisters were odious to him, and Lily's attractions stood out forcibly in contrast to them.

Meanwhile they had reached the farm, and Sir Edgar turned round to called them into the covered shed where the machine had been drawn up.

Farm machinery was a hobby of Sir Edgar Dyson's, and although not one of his hearers knew anything about the subject, or cared very much about it, he took a great delight in explaining and expounding the workings of all the different wheels, and cogs, and joints of the machine. Only Lily listened intently, with her soft brow puckered up eagerly, trying hard to understand where the turnips were put in and what happened to them inside, and how they managed to come out of it chopped up, giving her whole mind to the process as though the breaking up into pieces of the homely vegetable were the one thing on earth she was most anxious to learn about. But that was because Sir Edgar was interested in it, and every true woman tries to share and enter into the tastes of the man she loves.

Somehow it came to pass, that in spite of all Mrs. Finch's vigilance, these two came to be separated a little from the others. It is difficult quite to know how it happened. Alice called Mrs. Finch to come into the poultry-yard and look at her own special white hen, of which she was very proud; and Norman, at the same minute, happened to wander away to the shed where the other children were busy inspecting the cows. Suddenly Edgar looked up, and perceived that he and Lily were left alone in the barn with the machine; he instantly ceased his essay on turnip-cutting, and took hold of her hand.

"I suppose your mother has been setting you against me, as usual?" he said, rather roughly.

Lily looked pained.

"Indeed, Sir Edgar, I think she is quite right," she answered with tears in her eyes, "and I think you will end by driving me away from here."

They were the hardest words she had ever spoken to him.

"So it has come to that—that you think me a brute—that you are afraid of me? I don't think much of your love, Lily."

She tried to draw her hand away, but he held it tightly and would not let it go.

They neither of them heard the stopping of a carriage, close by the farm, nor the advancing steps of a lady who came towards them across the yard.

All at once a voice behind them made them spring guiltily apart.

"Dear me, Miss Finch, how very extraordinary! Where are the children, pray, and how came you not to be at their lessons this morning? I heard voices and stopped the carriage to see who was here; and, dear me! can I believe my eyes?"—turning towards her son, as if she had only just perceived him—"you, Edgar!" It is impossible to describe the mingled amazement and horror with which Lady Dyson spoke her son's name.

But as to Lily, if the earth could only have opened and swallowed her up, she would have been very thankful.

CHAPTER X.

STELLA LOSES HER TEMPER AGAIN.

Wrexham Hall looked very gaunt and dreary as Stella King drove up alone to it in the dim gleam of the winter evening. Everything about the long facade, with its ponderous rows of white columns and its imposing Grecian portico, looked wealthy and solemn and intensely respectable; but was scarcely calculated to impress confidence or cheerfulness within the heart of the desolate girl who had come alone to find a home beneath its roof.

As the fly which had been thought good enough to bring her and her modest luggage from the station drew up noisily upon the stone flags under the porch, Stella's heart sank within her, and she could not help thinking bitterly of Cecily's selfish desertion of her.

Two powdered footmen, splendid creatures in crimson and black, flung open the doors to receive her, and ushered her into the large and well-lighted hall. No one else was there to welcome her.

Her heart sank within her as she followed one of them down a long corridor; and when the man entered a door at the further end of it, and told her respectfully that she would find Mr. King there in his study, Stella plucked up her courage, and determined to meet her grandfather with that spirit of independence and self-respect which was natural to her.

The old man was seated by his table reading by the light of a shaded lamp. He rose at her entrance, and Stella thought his long, angular figure would never come to its full height as it raised itself slowly out of the depths of his low, leathern arm-chair. In all her life he had never seen anyone so thin and tall.

"How d'ye do?" he said, not very graciously, holding out his long, claw-like hand to her. "Why didn't your sister come with you? I think she ought to have come; I am very much displeased that she should have begun by disobeying me."

"I am very sorry that you are vexed, grandpapa. I think, too, it would have been better if she had come her; but she had such a tempting invitation so Paris, and she is very young——"

"There—there! that will do," he interrupted, irritably, "I don't want to hear a whole list of excuses. I suppose your mother has brought you up like French girls, to do just as you please, and go your own way."

"I dont think French girls go their own way at all," said Stella smiling. "As a rule, they are kept far more strictly than English girls."

Mr. King looked a little surprised. It was rather astonishing to him to be answered and contradicted by this slight, fair girl. The young lady seemed to have plenty of self-confidence, at all events. Perhaps the old man did not think any the worse of her for it.

"Come here and let me look at you," he said, shortly, prudently dropping the discussion concerning the education of French girls. He drew her near to him, and held up the lamp so that it fell full upon her lovely face. He was evidently not displeased by what he saw, for his expression softened a little.

"So you are the young lady who refused to marry my heir, Norman Allingham?" he said, rather roughly.

Stella colored with a little natural indignation. "I certainly refused him," she answered composedly.

"Well, I'm sorry you didn't hit it off, for you have your father's good looks. Is your sister as pretty as you are?'

"I am sure I don't know," answered Stella, and she could not help laughing a little at this strange catechism through which the old man was putting her, "we are considered alike.'

"Humph!" He dropped her hand, and put the lamp down again upon the table "You were a goose to refuse him," he said, shortly; "it's so much the worse for you, and so much the better for her. I shall only allow her to stop in Paris a month. You children don't seem to have understood that I am your natural guardian, and as long as you are under age you are bound to obey me—do you here?" looking at her rather savagely—"to obey me."

"Yes, I hear you, grandpapa, and I will do my best to be dutiful," she answered, quietly, adding, however, after a moment's pause, "as long as you only require from me what is right and reasonable."

She was a brave girl to have said that, and after she had said it she was half afraid he would be angry. But this odd old man only laughed with a sort of a little inward chuckle, as though he were very much amused. Her fearlessness was rather fascinating to him, and all unknown to her, reminded him of her dead father, towards whom his withered old heart had softened when he had heard of his death.

"What on earth made you come at such an hour?" he said, changing the subject. "Dinner has been over long ago; it is a most awkward time of day to arrive."

"I could not held the boats and the trains," said Stella, smiling.

"Well, I couldn't keep dinner waiting for you; I never alter my dinner hour for anybody. I suppose you are not hungry?" looking at her sharply as though he dared her to own to such a thing. But Stella was quite undaunted.

"Indeed, I am very hungry indeed. I hope you will allow me something to eat.'

"What a dreadful thing a young appetite is! you children eat at all hours and destroy your digestions for life," he said grumblingly. "When you are my age the coats of your stomach will be gone."

"As long as I have a coat to my back," began Stella, laughingly; but her grandfather opened his eyes at her so alarmingly for daring to turn his words into a joke, that her harmless little jest died away upon her lips.

"Go and find Mrs. Finch, and ask her to get you something to eat," he said sternly.

"Who is Mrs. Finch, and where am I to find her?" inquired Stella.

HEALTH FOOD.

By Bill Nye.

While trying to reconstruct a telescope spine and put some new copper rivets in my lumbar vertebræ, this spring, I have had occasion to thoroughly investigate the subject of so-called health food, such as gruel, beef tea, inundations, toasts, oat meal, bran mash, soups, condition-powders, ham gems, ground feed, pepsin, hash, mush, and other hen feed usually put into the invalid who is too week to defend himself.

Of course it stands to reason that the reluctant and fluttering spirit may be won back to earth and joy once more in the leaden eye, unless due care be had relative to the food by means of which nature may be made to assert herself.

I do not care to say to the world through the columns of the Free Press that we may woo from eternity the trembling life with pie. Welsh rabbit and other wild game will not do at first. But I think I am speaking the sentiments of a large and emaciated constituency when I say that there is getting to be a strong feeling against oatmeal submerged in milk and in favor of strawberry short cake.

I almost ate myself into an early grave April by flying into the face of Providence and demoralizing old Gastric with oatmeal. I ate oatmeal two weeks, and at the end of that time my friends were telegraphed for, but before it was too late, I threw off the shackles that bound me. With a desperation born of a terrible apprehension, I arose and shook off the fatal oatmeal habit and began to eat beefsteak. At first life was trembling in the balance and there was a change in the quotations of beef, but from on there was a slight, delicate bloom on the wan cheek, and range cattle that had been escaped a long, severe winter on the plains began to apprehend a new danger and seek the secluded canyons of the inaccessible mountains.

I often thought while I was eating beefsteak food and waiting for death, how the doctors and other invited guests at the post mortem would start back in amazement to find the remnants of an eminent man filled with bran!

Through all the painful hours of the long night and the eventless day, while the mad throng rushed onward like a great river towards eternity's ocean, this thought was uppermost in my mind. I tried to get the physician to promise that he would not expose me and show the world what a low mockery I had been and how I had deceived my best friends. I told him the whole truth and asked him to spare my family the humiliation of knowing that though I might have led a blameless life my sunny exterior was only a thin cover for bran and shorts and middlings, crushed wheat and pearl barley.

I dreamed last night of being in a large city where the streets were paved with toast and the buildings were roofed with toast and the soil was bran and oatmeal, and the water was beef tea and gruel. All at once it came over me that I had solved the great mystery of death and had been consigned to a place of eternal punishment. The thought was horrible! A million eternities in a city built of dry toast and no meal! A home for never-ending cycles of ages, where the principal hotel and the post-office building and the opera house were built of toast, and the fire department squirted gruel at the devouring element! Never!

It was only a dream, but it has made me more thoughtful, and people notice that I am not so giddy and frivolous as I was.—Detroit Free Press.

Summer in Crowded New York.

In the alleyway of a tenement in New York a baby nestled in the arms of a young girl. Its face was covered with red spots which the doctor said were due to defective nutrition. In the top of No.— a child was sprawled out on a bed, too weak to brush away the flies which assailed it. A child over the roof took the doctor into No.— A baby was convulsed with a cough. The doctor put his ear to its heart and after a critical examination said it had a touch of bronchitis. Like a dead child a little one lay among the bed-clothing in the front room on the same floor. Its hands were thrown over its head and it moved uneasily. On the top floor of the same tenement a child had been sick for eight days and no doctor had been called to see it.

Sewing-machines rattle from morning to night in a towering tenement at No. — Essex street. Hundreds of Poles live in the building and earn a living by making clothing. They work, cook, eat and sleep in the same rooms, which are far from cleanly. The children pant in the close rooms and pine for want of attention. In one room four men bent over the work of their machines, two women took irons from the fire and pressed the finished clothing, while children cried on the floor. The men, women and children were sallow, and the heat from the stove made the atmosphere sticky. The people toiled unceasingly for the pittance which they earned to keep body and soul together, and had no time to find out the business of the intruders. Nor did they look up when accosted. On an upper floor a wrinkled hag crooned over a crying child. A woman sat on the ledge of the roof of No.— rocking a child in her arms. A little wind was stirring there and it was grateful to the little one. Below was a stone-paved court, upon which stagnant water stood in pools. A boy who had lost his feet drew himself over the roof in boxes fitted to his legs below his knees. "The Chinese have got a bad smell in their place down below," said he, "but this house is all right."—N. Y. Times.

Gentle Reminder.

Husbands are so stupid! The story of a man who went to town with his wife to do errands, and was sorely perplexed at missing something on his return, until he reached home and found he had forgotten his wife, reminds somebody of a women in Philadelphia who gave her husband six commissions to execute in New York. He telegraphed back that he had executed five and forgotten the last. It was an order for an illuminated sentence for a Sunday-school room. He was a good deal astonished when he received the reply: "Unto us this day a child is born—two feet wide and nine feet long."—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for August.

How he Won Her.

"I tell you, sir," indignantly exclaimed Colonel Webley, addressing a young man who aspired to the hand of his only child, "that I shall never give my consent to a union which I know shall be unhappy."

"We love each other," replied young Balchuff.

"Love be eternally blowed! So I could have said years ago. I was devoted to the woman I married and she was devoted to me."

"You have lived happily with each other, have you not?"

"Happily!" the Colonel contemptuously repeated. "I didn't have money enough to ensure happiness. Even in Arkansaw a man must have money. His wife may be devoted to him, but if he fails to provide those little delicacies which make life so enjoyable to a woman, she will speak of this sad lack of comfort, and instead of attributing it to financial inability will regard it as neglect. At times she will be melting with affection and vow that your love is all that she cares for in this world, but when some one, who in worldly goods seems no richer than yourself rides in a buggy with his wife, she loses sight of the great sustaining love and hankers after tangible affection, a street display of love."

"I am a young man of energy and good business capacity. I can work and earn money."

"No use in prolonging this conversation. I have told you that you shall not marry my daughter. I shall keep a close watch, and if I see you here again, I shall act with violence."

"Well, Colonel," said the young man with firmness, "as the gentler resources have failed, I am compelled to adopt the last resort. Some time ago, before you suspected that I was attached to your daughter, you borrowed ten dollars from me. Do not wince, sir; hear me through. You thought that I had forgotten the transaction, but I haven't. Now, sir, I intend to marry your daughter; if you persist in annoying me, I shall dun you for the money every time I see you."

The Colonel sat for a moment in deep thought. Finally he said, "Say, Bob, don't say anything more about the ten dollars; lend me five more and take the girl."—Arkansaw Traveller.

Color Hearing.

Popular expressions are often very significant. "I saw three dozen lights of all colors," or some similar expression may be heard from persons who have received violent blows on the head or face. Under the influence of shocks of this kind, the eye really seems to see infinite numbers of sparks. Shocks of a certain class impressed upon the nervous system seem to have the faculty of producing phenomena of light. This remark has been suggested by the facts we are about to relate, which lead us to suppose that sonorous vibrations are susceptible in certain cases of provoking luminous sensations. There are, in fact, persons who are endowed with such sensibility that they cannot hear a sound without at the same time perceiving colors. Each sound to them has its peculiar color; this word corresponds with red and that one with green, one note is blue and another is yellow. The phenomenon, "color hearing," as the English call it, has been hitherto little observed.

Dr. Nussbaumer, of Vienna, appears to have been the first person who took serious notice of it. While still a child, when playing one day with his brother, striking a fork against a pane of glass to hear the ringing, he discovered that he saw colors at the same time he perceived the sound; and so well did he perceive the colors that, when he stopped his ears, he could divine by it how loud a sound the fork had produced. His brother also had similar experiences. Dr. Nussbaumer was afterwards able to add to his own observations nearly identical ones made by a student in Zurich. To this young man, musical notes were translated by certain fixed colors. The high notes induced clear colors, and the low notes dull ones. More recently, M. Pedrano, an ophthalmologist of Nantes, has observed the same peculiarities in one of his friends.—Popular Science Monthly.

An Old Historic Castle for Sale.

Messrs. Daniel Smith, Son & Oakley publish an illustrated catalogue of the sale by auction of Devizes Castle. The photographs of this ancient pile represent a very beautiful old stronghold, in excellent "condition." Devizes Castle was founded by the Bishop of Salisbury, in the reign of Henry I., and Ordericus Vitalis says that there was not a more splendid fortress in Europe. How the people liked castles and castle building we learn from a frequently quoted chronicle. The catalogue contains romantic particulars of the history of the castle, which has private staircases, a secret chamber, doubtless a ghost, and, in short, everything handsome about it. It is just the sort of box a man would feel at home in, but, unluckily, we cannot all afford to buy feudal castles.—London Daily News.

A Moving Mountain.

Austrian papers report that a mountain in the neighborhood of Czernowitz, in the Bukovina, is manifesting singular symptoms of disturbance. MARRIED TO A LUNATIC.

Sane on Her Wedding Night, but a Maniac Next Day.—A Strange Courtship.

The old proverb about marrying in haste and repenting at leisure was never better illustrated than it was in a suit which came before Judge J. F. Daly in the Court of Common Pleas, New York. The action is one brought by David Holtz against his young wife, Pauline Holtz, a girl of twenty, to annul their marriage, which took place on the 2nd of last April.

FACTS FOR A NOVEL.

In his complaint the plaintiff says that his marriage occurred under the following circumstances:—He became engaged to the defendant on the day preceding his marriage, and, as he alleges, the defendant and her relations, for the purpose of inducing him to consent that the marriage should occur the next day, falsely represented to him that by the laws or customs of this State it was obligatory upon engaged parties to immediately appear before some officer or person stationed at the City hall for the purpose of performing the marriage ceremony; that when he refused to be married so quickly after the engagement, without having first become better acquainted with his intended wife, and without first consulting his mother, who was then on her way from Europe to this country, the defendant and her relations, for the purpose of hastening the marriage, fraudulently represented to him that such a ceremony was not binding upon those professing the Hebrew religion, and that their actual marriage could take place thereafter, and be performed by a minister of their own religion; that the plaintiff, who is a foreigner and unacquainted with the English language, was finally induced to consent to the marriage, which was performed at the City hall by one of the aldermen, and that this marriage was not consummated until the 15th of April following, on which day the parties were remarried by a Hebrew minister.

THE BRIDE BECOMES INSANE.

On the morning following the second ceremony of marriage, as Mr. Holtz proceeds to allege in his complaint, his young wife became insane, and had to be removed to the asylum on Blackwell's Island, where she still remains, under medical treatment as a lunatic, and upon information and belief it is alleged that she has been a lunatic for several years past, and has been several times in the asylum, but that she enjoys lucid intervals at various times, lasting from five days to two months, and that at such intervals she fully remembers all that had transpired before she relapsed into lunacy. At these times, as the complaint further states, she is well aware of her lunacy, but believes—having been so advised by physicians—that her cure may be effected in case of her becoming a mother. Mr. Holtz says that during his acquaintance with the defendant and up to the day following the second ceremony of marriage the defendant was enjoying one of these lucid intervals, and during this time acted like a sane person, and the fact of her having been insane was entirely unknown to him.

The plaintiff charges that the defendant and her relatives maliciously withheld from him the facts above stated, so that he might be induced to marry her, in utter disregard of his own happiness, more especially as the defendant's father is also a lunatic, so the plaintiff is informed and believes.

UNABLE TO SERVE THE SUMMONS.

Applications were presented to Judge J. F. Daly, in the special term of the Common Pleas Court, setting forth that the defendant was not in a fit condition to be served with the summons in thn action. Mr. Morris J. Friedlander, the plaintiff's attorney, stated in an affidavit that he went to the Blackwell's Island Asylum on th 1st of last June for the purpose of serving the summons personally upon the defendant. He says that Dr. Thomas M. Franklin, medical superintendent at the asylum, when informed of the purport of the visit, said that the defendant was not in a fit condition to receive the summons, and that the delivery of the paper to her would aggravate her mental disorder, and lessen the chances of her recovery. The doctor refused to permit the services of any paper upon her unless ordered to do so by the court. Mr. Friedlander then delivered the summons to the sheriff for service, but that officer or his deputy met with no better success. Mr. Friedlander says, in an affidavit, that the defendant, as he believes, is twenty years old, and before her marriage lived with her mother, and that her father is either an idiot or a lunatic, and has been in that condition for ten years past.

The plaintiff also makes an affidavit in which he states that he never saw the defendant's father at her house, and he was made to believe by both the defendant and her mother that her father was dead. The plaintiff says that he subsequently discovered that the father was alive and of unsound mind, and had not lived with his family since 1872.

Upon this statement of facts Judge Daly ordered that service of the summons be made upon the defendant personally, and also upon Dr. Franklin and the girl's mother.

Photographing an Elephant.

An exciting scene took place at Cross's zoological establishment in Earle street, Liverpool, recently. Mr. Cross wished to have his elephant, Jumbo II., photographed. Several photographers declined to do it, being afraid to face the animal; but at last Messrs. Brown, Barnes & Bell undertook the task. Early in the morning, before the place was open to the public, the elephant, which is always chained up with a heavy anchor chain, was unfastened and let out in the yard; but when he saw the camera directed towards himself, and the photographer manipulating it and looking at him through it, he got excited and with one blow of his trunk he smashed the apparatus, and was ready to deal a second blow as the photographer when some of the staff of the menagerie rushed to his assistance and succeeded in restoring the animal to his normal docile condition. On being assured that the elephant would now keep perfectly quiet the photographer commenced his work again with another camera and after several attempts, succeeded in obtaining a good negative.—St. James' Gazette.

TORNADOES.

Scientifically Accounted for and Some Remote Causes that Produce Painful Results Explained.

The following synopsis of a lecture delivered by Dr. Horace R. Hamilton, before the New York society for the promotion of science, contains so much that is timely and important that it can be read with both interest and profit:—

There is probably no subject of modern times that has caused and is causing greater attention than the origin of tornadoes. Scientists have studied it for the benefit of humanity; men have investigated it for the welfare of their families. It has been a vexed subject long considered, and through all this investigation the cyclone has swept across the land carrying destruction to scientists as well as to the innocent dwellers in its track. One thing, however, is certain; the cause of the cyclone must be sought far away from the whirling body of wind itself. Its results are powerful; its cause must also be powerful. Let us therefore consider a few facts. First, the appearance of a cyclone is invariably preceded by dark spots upon the face of the sun. These spots, indicating a disturbed condition of the solar regions, necessarily affect the atmosphere of our earth. An unusual generation of heat in one part of the atmosphere is certain to cause a partial vacuum in another portion. Air must rush in to fill this vacuum. Hence the disturbance—hence the cyclone. This theory finds additional confirmation in the fact that tornadoes come during the day and not at night. The dark spots upon the surface of the sun, whatever they may be, seem to cause great commotion in the atmosphere of the world, and it is almost certain that the extremely wet weather of the present season can be accounted for on precisely this basis. Is it reasonable to suppose that the marvellous effect of the sun upon vegetation and life in general shall be less than upon the atmosphere itself through which its rays come? The cause is remote, but the effect is here.

After describing some of the terrible effects of the cyclone, the speaker went on to say:—

This rule finds its application in nearly every department of life. An operator is in San Francisco—the click of the instrument manipulated by his fingers, in New York. The president makes a slight stroke of the pen in his study at the White House, and the whole nation is aroused by the act. An uneasiness and disgust with everything in life commonly called home-sickness, is felt by many people, when the cause is to be found in the distant home thousands of miles away. An uncertain pain may be felt in the head. It is repeated in other parts of the body. The appetite departs and all energy is gone. Is the cause necessarily to be found in the head? The next day the feeling increases. There are added symptome. They continue and become more aggravated. The slight pains in the head increase to agonies. The nausea becomes chronic. The heart grows irregular, and the breathing uncertain. All these effects have a definite cause; and, after years of deep experience upon this subject, I do not hesitate to say that this cause is to be found in some derangement of the kidneys or liver far away from that portion of the body in which these effects appear. But one may say, I have no pain whatever in my kidneys or liver. Very true. Neither have we any evidence that there is a tornado on the surface of the sun; but it is none the less certain that the tornado is here, and it is none the less certain that these great organs of the body are the cause of the trouble although there may be no pain in their vicinity.

I know whereof I speak, for I have passed through this very experience myself. Nearly ten years ago I was the picture of health, weighing more than 200 pounds, and as strong and healthy as any man I ever knew. When I felt the symptoms I have above described, they caused me annoyance, not only by reason of their aggravating nature, but because I had never felt any pain before. Other doctors told me I was troubled with malaria, and I treated myself accordingly. I did not believe, however, that malaria could show such aggravated symptoms It never occurred to me that analysis would help solve the trouble, as I did not presume my difficulty was located in that portion of the body. But I continued to grow worse. I had a faint sensation at the pit of my stomach nearly every day. I felt a great desire to eat, and yet I loathed food. I was constantly tired and still I could not sleep. My brain was unusually active, but I could not think connectedly. My existence was a living misery. I continued in this condition for nearly a year; never free from pain, never for a moment happy. Such an existence is far worse than death, for which I confess I earnestly longed.

It was while suffering thus that a friend advised me to make a final attempt to recover my health. I sneered inwardly at his suggestion, but I was too weak to make any resistance. He furnished me with a remedy, simple yet palatable and within two days I observed a slight change for the better. This awakened my courage. I felt that I would not die at that time. I continued the use of the remedy, taking it in accordance with directions, until I became not only restored to my former health and strength, but of greater vigor than I have before known. This condition has continued up to the present time, and I believe I should have died as miserably as thousands of other men have died and are dying every day had it not been for the simple yet wonderful power of Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy I employed.

The lecturer then described his means of restoration more in detail, and concluded as follows:

My complete recovery has caused me to investigate the subject more carefully, and I believe I have discovered the key to most ill health of our modern civilization. I am fully confident that four-fifths of the diseases which afflict humanity might be avoided were the kidneys and liver kept in perfect condition. Were it possible to control the action of the sun, cyclones could undoubtedly be averted. That, however, is one of the things that cannot be. But I rejoice to say that it is possible to control the kidneys and liver; to render their action wholly normal, and their effect upon the system that of purifiers rather than poisoners. That this end has been accomplished largely by means of the remedy I have named I do not have a doubt, and I feel it my duty to make this open declaration for the enlightenment of the profession and for the benefit of suffering humanity in all parts of the world.

FOR THE
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

picking up all fallen fruit and burying it before the worm matures and leaves the fruit taking refuge in the ground.

Black Knot is more prevalent on wet undrained land than on other soils; on the blue plum than on those of other colors; more prevalent on trees propegated from suckers than those grafted on the native stock, it is more prevalent on wet seasons than on dry ones. The only remedy is to cut it off early, as soon as it appears, as the knots if left on the tree till the fruit is ripe also ripen and the sprouts are scattered, and the sap of the tree is so poisoned that in a few years the trees generally die. Your committee recommend every patron to raise a plentiful supply of strawberries, they are so easily grown and so productive that there is no reason why there should not be an abundant supply in season on every patrons table. Your committee think the time has come when there should be a greater co-operative effort by patrons to secure better returns for the sale of fruit, as we are impressed with the idea that a very much better price could be obtained for fruit through co-operation; better markets could be secured together with reduced freights. In view of the great demand for dried and canned fruits in the North West Territory, your committee fails to see why the fruit of this division should be shipped to Chicago, Buffalo, Detroit and other points paying duty, then canned, dried, &c., and shipped to our Great North West, again paying duty. Your committee are deeply convinced that there is an excellent opening for at least three canning and drying factories in this division and would recommend that a special committee be appointed to examine into and report at next meeting of this grange, as to the best means to be adopted to secure the establishment of those industries in our midst. All of which is respectfully submitted.

Committee { D. Armstrong, R. J. Doyle, Jas. Brodie.

The committee on Seed Grain beg leave to report as follows in regard to fall wheat: We are sorry to have to report that this crop will be a partial failure this year, yet we would advise the patrons to continue the culture of fall wheat and to sow all the land that they can put in proper condition and get it in the ground in good time, as we have observed for the last ten years fall wheat, like fruit, has only succeeded each alternate year. If this is true then next year will be a fall wheat year. As to the different varieties or kinds, there are different opinions, but from observation, the Clawson

All of which is respectfully submitted.

D. Armstrong, Chairman Com.

The committee on Jurisdiction beg to report that they are happy to state no business requiring attention has been brought before them.

P. Christie, Chairman Com.

The committee on Education beg to report that the limited time at their disposal prevents their giving the subject that consideration its merits demand. Committee—P. Christie, B. White.

The committee on Municipal Law beg leave to report that in their opinion this Grange should take such steps to have a change made in the present law regarding the inspection of weights and measures so as to have a local inspector to each village and town throughout Ontario, so that, should a dispute arise in regard to the correctness of weights the inspector would be at hand to inspect the scales. In reference to a change in County Council, we would recommend that the special committee appointed for the purpose would give the matter their early consideration, and in the report they may present would give the date at which this grange first took action in this matter some years ago, and that the Master and Secretary of this Grange be instructed to prepare and forward a memorial to the Dominion Government asking that the change herein suggested be granted, and that a committee be named by the Master to consider the present system of the grading of Barley with a view to securing the proper inspection of this grain. Committee—P. Christie, A. Bond, Jas. Long.

Report of committee on good of order: 1st, We would recommend punctuality and regular attendance at sub-Granges. 2nd, system in business, as result of the foregoing we will more likely accomplish our desires, unity is strength, system is unity while anything worth doing is worth doing well. 3rd, We, your committee, fully believe that if the members of the grange will only co-operate in all our work that we can do anything we please, and that we hope will not harm anyone, but rather the contrary for when the Agriculturists prosper in this country, all other branches of industry likewise flourish. 4th, Sociality is a virtue. Now it is a great importance that we do all we can to keep down contentions and cherish sociability. We humbly recommend that the members observe these suggestions for the good of the order.

6th, that the delegates be supplied with the copies of the minutes with notice of the meeting, all of which we respectfully submit. J. M. Turner, Chairman of Committee.

Bros. Reid and Gifford addressed the Grange on the business transacted at last meeting of Provincial Grange stating that the business of that body was transacted in a very satisfatory and business-like manner. The W M. gave some explanations on the working of the Grange Insurance Company.

Moved by Bro. A. Gifford, seconded by Bro. H. Reid, that the delegates here present exert their influence in their sub-granges and neighborhood to secure as large an attendance as possible on Wednesday of the exhibition week of the Agricultural and Arts Association, at Guelph, that being the day specially set apart for the Grange. JOHN WEBER, Sec.,
G.D.G.No.2, Vandeleur P.O.

To the Officers and Members of Grey Division Grange, Assembled:

Your committee on Horticulture take pleasure in reporting that they are of opinion that there will be a medium crop of fruit the present year, while the apple crop may in some localities slightly under the average, yet plums promise to be over an average crop. Small fruit it is believed, will be an average crop. Your committee desire to draw the especial attention of the Grange to the invasion of the curculio, which has been so disastrous to plum growers in the older settlements of the province. This insect, together with the black knot, in many sections of the province completely destroyed both tree and fruit. The county of Grey, being now the largest plum growing county in Ontario, having a far and wide reputation for the fine quality of plums. Patrons should use every effort to retain its reputation in this respect. Your committee are of opinion that the members of the grange may be of very great service to themselves and the community by pointing out the threatened danger to the plum interest, and unitedly using their influence to ward off this threatened evil. The curculio made its appearance in various localities last year, and those persons who have acted promptly have succeeded in keeping it within bounds. This insect attacks the small plums almost as soon as formed and works on till the fruit is ripe. It is stated that a single insect will sting and deposit its larva in from 1,000 to 5,000 specimens of fruit, then it dies leaving a numerous family for the fol

And see that you buy for Spring, Summer [and Fall
Right splendid good oil.

Insist upon having the very best brand,
Now good as ever, in fact it is grand,
Everlasting wear without grit or sand,
Machines run smoothly, no jarring or noise,
And engines too in its use rejoice.
Carding also it suits, as you plainly see,
Heavy gristing cannot do without me.

ESPECIALLY FOR LADIES.

The Saleswoman.—Scientific Courtship.—Fun for the Girls.

The Saleswoman.

An American lady who has resided abroad long enought to imbibe foreign ideas, asserts that the shop manners in America are the worst in the world, assigning as a reason for this unfortunate state of affairs that the saleswomen "are generally of the humblest origin, and are too ignorant even to appreciate the virtue of courtesy." This is a sweeping assertion, and it is in the main incorrect. Thirty years ago a shop girl might have been looked upon with contempt, because it was only the "woman who dared" who filled any responsible position in public life in this new country; but to day it is the woman who makes the position respectable, not the position that subjects the woman to its domination, and the best blood of the nation flows to-day in the veins of shop girls. In their ranks may be found the daughters of clergymen, of generals of the army, senators, and the penniless heirs to a pedigree for which the members of the new dynasty would gladly exchange some of their superfluous wealth. And this lady is on the wrong side of the counter to judge of their politeness. It would probably enlighten her if the shop-girl should tell the experience gained on the inside of the counter—of the women who want to buy and can never make up their minds what to get, who tumble a dozen boxes of lace to select one yard of another kind, who questions the shop-girl about the goods as if she were personally responsible for their manufacture, who cheapen and sharpen and deceive, and reveal their fine ladyhood in a thousand contemptible forms. If the unhappy clerk sometimes loses patience under her multitude of trials, the prosperous woman whose carriage waits can surely afford to be patient and forgiving to a sister who has so little and works so hard for that.

Scientific Courtship.

Miss Mary Flynn was studying medicine and courted at the same time. Mr. William Budd was attending to the latter part of the business. One evening, while they were sitting together in the parlor, Mr. Budd was thing how he could manage to propose. Miss Flynn was explaining several physiological facts to him.

"Do you know," said she, "that thousands of people are actually ignorant that they smell with the olfactory peduncle?"

"Millions of 'em," replied Mr. Budd.

"And Aunt Mary wouldn't believe me when I told her she could not wink without a sphincter muscle!"

"How unreasonable!"

"Why a person can not even kiss without a sphincter."

"Indeed!"

"I know it is so."

"May I try if I can?"

"Oh, Mr. Budd, it is really too bad of you to make light of such a subject."

Mr. Budd seized her hand and kissed it. She permitted it to remain in his grasp.

"I did not notice," he said, "whether a—a—what do you call it?—a sphincter helped me then or not. Let me try it again."

Then he tried again, and while he held her she explained to him about the muscles of that portion of the human body.

"It is remarkable how much you know about such things," said Mr. Budd, "really, wonderful. Now, for example, what is the bone at the back of the head called?"

"Why, the occipital bone, of course."

"And what are the names of the muscles of the arm?"

"The spinalis and infra-spinalis, among others."

"Well, now, let me show what I mean. When I put my infra-spiralis around your waist, so, it is your occipital bone that rests upon my shoulder blade, in this way."

"My back hair primitively, but the occipital bone of course afterward. But, Mr. Budd, suppose pa shou'd come in and see us?"

"Him come! Who cares?" said Mr. Budd, boldly. "I think I'll exercise a sphincter again and take a kiss."

"Mr. Budd, how can you?" said Miss Flynn, after he had performed the feat.

"Don't call me Mr. Budd; call me Willie," he said, drawing her closer. "You accept me, don't you? I know you do, darling."

"Willie," whispered Miss Flynn, faintly.

"What, darling?"

"I can hear your heart beat."

"It beats only for you, my angel."

"And it sounds to me out of order. The ventricular contraction is out of uniform."

"Small wonder for that when its bursting with joy."

"You must put yourself under treatment for it. I will give you some medicine."

"It's your own property, darling; do what you please with it. But somehow the sphincter operation is the one that strikes me most favorably. Let me see how it works again."

But why proceed? The old, old story was told again, and the old, old performance of Mr. Budd's mouth was told again. And about eight years later Mr. Budd was wishing that Mary would catch some disease among her patients, and Mary was thinking the best possible use Willie could be put to would be a subject for the dissecting-table. —Max Adler.

Ladies' Humor.

Pooling their issues—women giving their children a bath.

When a woman wants to be pretty she bangs her hair, and when she wants to be ugly she bangs the door.

Ruskin says that no couple should marry until they have courted seven years. This would lead one to suppose that Ruskin runs a soda fountain.

It was the young tailor who said, referring to a rival for the affections of a young lady, that he thought he knew enough to be able to cut him out.

Count—"Don't you dance at all this evening, madame?" "Not till midnight." "Why so?" "Because to day is the anniversary of my husband's death."

Mrs. Homespun, who has a horrible time every morning to get her young brood out of their beds says she cannot understand why children are called the rising generation.

"I know," said a little girl to her elder sister's young man at the supper table, "that you will join our society for the protection of little birds because mamma says you are very found of larks."

"No," said Mrs. McGill, "we didn't celecrate All Fool's day at our house. The 'squire never pays any attention to legal hollow days; and as for me, I feel just as foolish one day as another."

"Your mother coming!" exclaimed Smithers; "why, they say the old Harry couldn't live with her." "But," replied Mrs. S., in her most taunting manner, "you will try to for my sake, won't you, Charley."

"I was at the theatre last night," said Clara, "and what do you think? Charley Norris was there in the very next seat to me." "Was he?" replied Mary. "Did he favor you with any of his long stories?" "Oh, no," said Clara; "he hadn't much to say to me; he talked most of the time to the young lady with him." "I see," said Mary, "he gave her tongue and you cold shoulder."

Mrs. Jones, head of the house, filling out census returns—"The impudence of such a question. Mr. Jones, listen to this. This paper says, "state the number of idiots in family, if any?'" Mr. Jones, nursing baby —"Mark down 'one' on the idiot column, my dear." Mrs. J.—"What do you mean, Mr. Jones?" Mr. J.—"Didn't I deliberately marry you, Mrs. Jones?" Mrs. J.—"Yes." Mr. J.—"Well?"

A maiden aunt of a Brooklyn man, who tells the story, has no patience with anything that cannot be turned to some useful account. She wastes no time herself and cannot see why those around her should waste any. The other day she said to her nephew, the Brooklyn man, when he returned from his office: "John, I see that the gentleman next door is a great smoker. I wonder whether he would mind coming over into our garden and smoking in our rosebushes to kill the caterpillars that are destroying the buds? Would you just as lief ask him?"

A Useful Property.

"Fine set of encyclopœdias you've got there," said a visitor in a lawyer's office the other day, stopping before a dust covered glass case in one corner of the room."

"Yes," said the lawyer, who was busily writing, "very well for reference. Perfect library in itself. Nothing like it. Could'nt do without it now, if I tried."

"Use it right along, do you?" asked the visitor, examining the lettered backs with increasing interest.

"Oh, yes, have to turn to it every little while. Makes a man scholarly, you know, and all that sort of thing."

"I see, I see," said the delighted visitor, "pity all lawyers don't follow your example. Guess I'll look up Egypt a little, if you don't care," and the visitor clawed at the moulding on the glass doors until he almost tore his nails out of their sockets. "Hello, keep it locked, do you?"

"I—that is—yes. Oh, yes. You see I don't wan't everybody pulling and hauling over those elegant volumes."

"Of course, of course. Quite right. Where's the key?"

"The—the key? Oh, you mean the key. Why, to be sure, it's the key you want. Well, let me see, I lost that key."

"Lost it? Good heavens! Why how do you get along for a day without consulting your library?"

"Well, it it's anything important I can go to the Public Library, you know; and if it isn't, why, there's Webster's Dictionary. Pretty old, Webster is, but all the words I want are in it, and with the Directory and the Crop Reports I manage to scrape along somehow."

"Great Cæsar! and how long has the key been lost?"

"Let's see. Bought those books last January. January, February, yes, lost it in the cistern last February. Clean out the cistern in August, you know, and then I'll find it. Oh, you bet I'll find it. Call around then, and I'll stuff you with knowledge clean up to your gills."

Women's Study of Women.

Have women who write satisfied the women who read in their portrayals of intellectual or lovable women? Have they held themselves as closely to artistic and dramatic consistency and propriety as have men treating the same subject? Dickens gave poor little Dora more love taps than he did many a more admirable picture of femininity, but they were strokes that a father would give to a spoiled child. There was in his line of treatment no suggestion of the man's disposition to express the man preference for woman. Not many women have written with as utter forgetfulness of sex, or with as complete a subordination of sex to the artistic relentlessness of the situation, as he did. As a rule women workers in fiction have given more attention to the characters and actions of men than than to women. That is to say, their finest work has been on the portraits of men, and their tenderness and love taps and unconscious demonstrations of sympathy have been for men. And because of this women in fiction created by women have been no more satisfactory than those created by men.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Davy Jones' Locker.

Every one has heard of "Davy Jones' locker," but few know just who Davy Jones is and what his locker consists of. Old sailors are of the opinion that the locker is at the bottom of the sea, off soundings. Its mouth is between two gigantic mountains, whose sides gradually recede like those of a funnel for hundreds of miles. All currents turn thitherward at a certain phase of the moon, and thus every lost ship and every drowned sailor eventually drifts into the great submarine mouth. When angered by offences against his unwritten laws, such as setting sail on Friday, carrying dead bodies, killing cats, dropping water buckets, and the like, sailors believe that Davy will personally appear and demand satisfaction—sometimes being satisfied with the sacrifice of one man and sometimes pulling a ship and his crew down into his locker. Many sailors aver that they have seen Davy Jones.—New York Sun.

Adopting Grandpa.

An old man—not ragged, but clad in old and faded and timeworn garments, and moving with feeble steps and weary air—sat down under a tree on John R. street the other day to rest a bit. Three or four children were playing in the yard at his back, and directly a mite of a girl looked through the fence and asked:

"Would you hurt a little girl?"

"Bless me, no!" he replied. "Why, I'd even step aside to pass a bug or worm! No, child, I would'nt hurt a hair of your head for all the money in the world."

"Are you anybody's grandpa?" she inquired as the other children crowded up.

"No—not now, child. There was a time—dear me! but it hurts my old heart to remember it—when children called me grandpa. It was years ago, years and years, but I can almost hear their voices yet."

"Be you crying?"

"N-no. The tears will spring up as I recall the past, but I'm not crying. There are days when I can't keep 'em back—nights when I am a child, but I'm trying to be strong just now."

"I guess I'll come out and see you. My doll's broke her neck and is most dead."

"Come right along, child! I used to mend legs and arms and necks when the children brought their dolls to me."

The little one passed through the gate and sat down beside the poor old man, and while he sought to save the life of the "most dead" doll by means of a stick and a string the child observed:

"You must be quite old, grandpa; you are all skin and bone."

"Old? Bless you, yes! I was 81 only a week or two ago. Yes, I'm poor in flesh as well as in purse."

"So your grand-children had doll, eh?"

"Yes, dear—dolls and toys and fine clothes and books and everything they wanted. I was rich then."

"And did they comb your hair?"

"Oh, yes."

"And sing to you?"

"Yes."

"Well, I guess I'll sing you a song, for I'm going to ask ma if I can't adopt you as my grandpa. You must excuse my voice, for I swallowed a pin the other day and ma expects it to work out of my shoulder this fall. I guess I'll sing about the three little graves. Don't look at me or I shall forget."

And in a voice full of childish quavers, and frequently stopping as if to swallow some of the words she sung:

Under an elm three little graves—
Under the sod my children three;
The years may pass but my heart will grieve
And sorrow will ever rest with me.
Under the elm I walked to-day,
I looked——

Why, grandpa, the tears are just running down your cheeks!"

"Y-yes, child—I can't help it! My poor old life is full of graves and griefs!"

"Is your wife dead?"

"Long ago, child."

"And all the children?"

"Dead or scattered. I am all alone."

"Well, that's funny. You can wipe your eyes on my apron if you want to."

"Here's your doll—good as new."

"That's nice. If I should adopt you I'd keep you mending dolls all the time. Have you got over crying?"

"Yes, child."

"Well, then, you must be hungry. I'm always hungry after a good cry. Wait a minute."

She ran into the house to return with a generous slice of bread and butter and a piece of meat, and as she handed the food to the old man she said:

"I've got to go in now, but we'll remember that I've adopted you as my grandpa. Don't cry any more and come back to-morrow. Good-bye, grandpa!"

"Good-bye!"

And men who passed by saw an old man with his face in his hands to hide his tears, and when they asked the matter a child who stood by explained:

"Why, sir, he's crying because he's all alone in the world, and a little girl has adopted him!"—Detroit Free Press.

Had Heard of It.

There was a small crowd in front of the Western Union Telegraph office the other day seeking any new information about the strike of the operators, when a man who seemed considerably excited pushed his way in and called out:

"Can anybody here give me a little information?"

"What is it!" asked one.

"I'd like to know what this thing is. Have they torn down the telegraph wires?"

"Oh, no. It is simply a strike."

"Who has been struck? Who struck him? What for?

"All the telegraph operators have struck for higher wages."

"Ah! I begin to see. He wants higher wages, eh?"

"Yes, sir, and the Western Union Company—"

"Who's he?"

"Why, the company owning the lines."

"Ah! Yes. I never inquired into the matter, but I presume you are right."

"The company refuses to grant the demand."

"He does, eh? That's it, eh? Well, I declare! Then it must have been this thing the papers were referring to!"

"Yes, sir."

"And the boys want higher wages?"

"Yes."

"And the company won't pay?"

"It hasn't yet."

"And if I should want to telegraph to my brother down in Ohio I couldn't do it?"

"No."

"Well, I declare! But isn't that odd? The old woman won't believe it with my hand on the Bible. I'm very much obleeged to all of you. If I'd happen to have dropped into some blacksmith shop it's ten to one if they wouldn't have given me the news all mixed up. Let's see: Telegraph—strike—more wages—Western Union—brother in Ohio—company won't pay. I guess I can remember that. Good-day, gentlemen."

The Rev. Dr. Hall said that every rock was a sermon, when a boy was stealing apples from Mr. Hall's orchard. When the boy's father subsequently asked him why he limped he replied that he was struck with one of Mr. Hall's sermons.

The Shadow of a Hand.

In the year 1846 the inhabitants of Dieppe were thrown into a state of the utmost consternation by a series of robberies and murders, evidently the work of one man. No trace of the perpetrator could be discovered, though one of his intended victims, who had narrowly escaped, averred that he had only three fingers on one of his hands. The Government offered a large reward for his apprehension, and the police displayed the greatest activity. In the outskirts of Dieppe there lived an elderly lady, of the name of Beaumaurice, alone with one servant, in a rather solitary house. She was the widow of an officer, and noted for her strength of character and personal courage. The excitement prevailing in the town made no visible impression upon her, though the contrary might have been expected from one in her lonely position. On the 30th of April, Madame Beaumaurice, who had been suffering all day from nervous headache, retired to her bed-chamber about ten o'clock in the evening. Feeling very tired, she sat down in an easy chair to take a little rest. Before her stood the dressing-table, draped with curtains reaching to the floor. A lamp was burning behind her, on a little table. The lady had begun to undress herself when she saw something that stopped the beating of her heart. There appeared on the floor the shadow of a man's hand. The hand had only three fingers! The position of affairs was clear enough; the murderer was concealed under the dressing-table. The lady kept perfectly still and considered what was to be done. After a few moments reflection, she went to the door and called her servant, and asked her, as soon as she made her appearance—"Marie do you know where M. Bernard lives?" "Yes, madame." "I had quite forgotten that I have 500 francs to pay to-morrow morning. You had better go at once and get the money." "Very well, madame." "And lest he should hesitate about giving you the notes, I will give you a written order to take to him." The girl waited, and her mistress wrote—"Dear M. Bernard, the murderer of the Rue des Armes and the Rue Grenard is in my house. Come immediately, with two or three gendarmes, and take him into custody.—Helene Beaumaurice." She gave the note to the servant maid and sent her away. Then she sat down again and waited. Yes, the lady sat a whole hour in the room, in the presences of a notorious murderer who lay concealed under her dressing-table. There she sat—calm, cool, and resolute. The shadow of the hand appeared from time time on the floor—the only token of the dreadful presence. When at length the gendarmes arrived, Jacques Reynauld was taken prisoner, after a desperate struggle, and shortly afterwards paid the penalty of his crimes under the axe of the guillotine.

The Real Worth of the Vacation.

The superior man is the man who makes the best uses of his natural forces; the inferior person is the one who uses up his vitality in the shortest space of time. This may be a slow way of approaching a great principle, but it is perhaps the most sure method of showing the way to that conservative and rational living which has characterized the wisest people and those who have used life to the best advantage. There is vast power in keeping an equilibrium of forces. The vacation is the time when nature repairs the waste tissues. It seems like idleness to be lolling around listlessly by the seashore or at the country farm or by the mountain side, but it is just that seeming torpor of the faculties, on the part of the brain workers, which does most to recruit wasted energies, and is the best use to which the swiftly fleeting hours of vacation can be put. There is nothing like the extreme of rest to balance the extremes of strain to which bright persons are subjecting themselves in daily life. It can only be met in all of us by such a return to nature that her thousand ministrations to the minds and hearts of men may not be thwarted by our own indiscretion. The great thing is to maintain an equable life, to keep the nerves steady, to hold ourselves in check, and, if vacation can be used in such a way that professional and business people and busy brain workers can find rest for themselves in July and August, the whole community gains by their renewal of the chief forces of life. This is what a wisely-used vacation means for those who are now taking it. It means a mind and body in good repair on the first day of September.

DOOM OF IRISH INFORMERS.

The Fate that has been Meted Out to Them in the Past.

The fate of Bailey, who was murdered in Skipper's alley, Dublin, in the latter end of 1881, should have taught Carey how little dependence he could place upon police protection when his services were no longer required. This Bailey gave information to the authorities which enabled them to make one of the most extensive seizures of arms and amunition ever achieved by them in Ireland. Twenty-five rifles, ten revolvers, 12,000 rounds of ammunition, an immense store of dynamite, fulminate of mercury, detontating caps, and gunpowder fell into their hands through Bailey's instrumentality. How did the Government reward him? After a fortnight they from him, but proffered to pay his fare to London, a generosity which would have lessened the British Exchequer by about $5. The wretched man begged to be sent out to some distant colony, pleading that his life would be in as much jeopardy in London as in Dublin. The representative of the Crown in Ireland could not dream of becoming responsible for such an extravagance. Bailey was turned adrift, his landlord would not let him back to his miserable tenement. His employer would not give him another hour's work. He was forced with his family into the workhouse. Even there the paupers turned against him and rendered his existence so unendurable that he ventured into the outer world again with the desperate resolve to beg or steal as much as would take him out of the country. Three days after this his body was discovered in Skipper's alley, and two bullets in his head told from what quarter his death sentence had come. No clue has ever been found to justify an arrest for the crime.

Other Irish informers, too, have been

from the moment they appeared in the witness-box to tender evidence against their former friends. Pierce Nagle was the first traitor of importance in the Fenian ranks. To his revelations were due the conviction of the staff of the Irish People newspaper, and the first executive of the Irish Revolutionary Brotherhood—Luby, O'Leary, Kickham, O'Donovan Rossa and the rest. After his nefarious work had been accomplished he disappeared, and for eleven years nothing was heard from him. But the vengeance and hatred of an Irish conspiracy is everlasting, and in 1875 (eleven years after his treachery) it overtook Pierce Nagle. One cold gray autumn morning his corpse was found under a London railway arch, and a huge cheese knife driven through the back and penetrating the heart told that he had not died from natural causes.

Warner, the Cork informer, who was the first to reveal the existence of the seditious spirit in the army, was attacked a year or so subsequently in Clontarf. He was severely wounded, but did not die then, and his assailant, who was taken on the spot, got off with twenty years' penal servitude. Warner's wounds hastened his death, and added to the agony of his last moments. Talbot, to whom the life-long imprisonment of Sergeant McCarthy and other military Fenians was due, escaped for five or six years, but it was only a respite, not a reprieve. He was eventually shot through the head in Hardwicke street, Dublin, after leaving a brothel. He died in terrible pain, which was intensified by the bungling of surgeons who attended him, and who, in probing for the bullet, explored every inch of his cranium. Another military informer, named Meara was shot dead in a public house in Bishop street, Dublin, before he ended his appearances as witness in the court-martial. The last informer who suffered the death penalty previous to Carey was a man named Clarke, who was traced all the way from Mayo to Australia, and shot whilst engaged in ploughing a field. —Philadelphia Press.

Life on High Olympus.

"Mars!"

The colonel lifted his eyes from the map of Gen. Crook's Mexico campaign and said, with an air of celestial weariness, as he caught the gleam of her Tremont Temple spectacles:

"All right, Minerva; make it short and not too hard. March on."

"Why did the State of Massachusetts refuse to sell the syndicate one-half of the Hoosac Tunnel?" asked the blue-eyed maid, holding her fingers in Emerson's "English Traits" to mark the article on "Song and Dance Business Without a Master," she had been reading.

The colonel rubbed his helmet of the shining bronze and awful plume and said he hadn't taken much interest in Massachusetts politics since the Parcæ had refused to make Ben Butler a double elf dee, but he supposed they would sell it because there was some sell about it."

"But Hebe said:

"But don't talk so like a mouthing paragrapher, Mars; you make Minervas."

However, Athene pressed the question, and said:

"Juno know the reason yourself, O white-armed Hebe?"

"Oh, don't Boreas with fourth grade examinations;" replied the ox-eyed queen of heaven. "If they cancel it they can't sell it, of course."

"But all the gods shouted, "Construe, construe!" and Hebe said she would not guess anymore if she was to be Saturn in that way.

Ganymede, the barkeeper, coming in for orders, said he didn't know that he caught on just exactly, but he thought it was because one was sellin' a hole, and the other was hole in a cell, whereat all Olympus howled, and told him to crawl up into the hayloft and sleep it off.

"But say, Athene," said Apollo, the celebrated inventor of the naris water which bears his name, "why can't they sell one-half the tunnel?"

"Because they don't half to?" suggested Mercury; but the immortals told him if he couldn't do better than that he'd better go back to the drug store and stick to the thermometer business. And then Athene said:

"Because they have to sell the hole thing if they sell any of it."

A hollow groan, mingled with low calls for "police," swept over the hill.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Indian Treatment of Mexican Captives.

The five Mexican women and one child recaptured from the Apaches by Gen. Crook were surprised by a band of Apaches under the personal command of Geronimo, about the 10th of May. The Indians, with their captives, travelled incessantly the remainder of the day and all night. They calculated that the next morning after the capture they were at least one hundred miles distant, though they cannot tell in which direction. For three days they were without water, but after that it was found in abundance. The country through which they passed was wild beyond description. At times they were compelled to crawl upon all fours. Their thirst for the first three days nearly drove them crazy, and the Indians would whip and lash them up, and compel them to travel. Toward the last of their captivity their food commenced giving out, and they were put upon ration, a small piece of raw beef being all that was given them. This had to be divided among the six. Mrs. Antonia Hernandez all this time carried her little child in her arms. The Indian children took great pleasure in tormenting him, pinching him, and jabbing sharpened sticks into his sides, giving him great pain. When they remonstrated, Geronimo or his men only laughed at her misery. The last two days of their captivity they had no food at all. There was snow on the mountains. The cold was intense, and the women suffered greatly, almost freezing. The Indians never remained quiet in one spot a day, but were continually moving. They travelled nearly 100 miles a day, going in every direction, but tending generally nearly westward. The captives were abused and maltreated in every possible manner. They were made to work heavily whenever camp was made, and were a general object of abuse and ridicule. The Indians would take up Mrs. Hernandez' little boy, threaten to kill him, and would throw stones at him to the great mental anguish of his mother. One of the women was sent as a hostage of some sort to Chihuahua to make peace. The exposure to cold, thirst, famine and exhaustion from travel and fear of torture was having an effect on the poor women. The first thing they knew they were hustled one day further into the mountains. The next day a brother of Chief Chatte delivered them up to Gen. Crook. As one of them expressed herself when she saw Gen. Crook and the soldiers: "It seemed as if the sky opened and Heaven appeared." —San Francisco Morning Call.

The Horrors of New York City.

Dwellers in the lake cities, or in any free and open city, with access to the air, have little conception of the suffering of the laboring population in New York. New York has its sea breezes, but they cannot penetrate the narrow streets nor modify the retained heat of the brick walls. They are literally ovens, where the baking is done not by direct fire but by radiated heat. A New York physician says the best place in the world to bake a baby is New York. They melt away every summer. People are so thick in the tenement houses that they breed discomfort and disease and inflict them upon one another. There is no water on the upper floors; or if there is it is tepid. In small rooms six, eight and even ten people are huddled, and they cannot get a draft by opening their doors through. They are handiworking people, tired out at night, and the irritated children keep them awake. The streets and roofs are thronged with women striving for a breath of fresh air. Sometimes the mother falls asleep from sheer exhaustion, and policemen have rescued their babies from the gutter in which the little ones tumbled from the mother's relaxed arms. The vermin swarm on hot nights with special virulence. Exasperated by the heat, and vermin and want of rest, the inmates of these places quarrel, and often come to blows. The promiscuity of the sexes driven into a herd to sleep or rest, is the source of immorality.

New York, according to the census, is the greatest manufacturing city in the United States. Nothing that the New York Tribune's protection agent, Mr. Porter, can find to say of the English workingmen is more horrible than can be told of the tenement districts in New York. And if any English people should care to advocate free trade as the Tribune advocates protection, it need only have one of its representatives write up these crowded New York streets in the great manufacturing centre of the United States.

A PRIZE STORY.

It Entitles its Teller to be Called Chief Liar.

It is related that Mr. Sam McCurdy of Louisville, Ky., was sitting 'neath the shade of a tree talking to some friends, when his attention was called to a hen with a brood of young chickens and a large rat that had just emerged from its hole and was quietly regarding the young chickens with the prospect of a meal in view. As the rat came from the hole the house-cat caught sight of it. At the appearance of its ancient enemy, the cat, a Scotch terrier quietly made for the place were the cat stood. At this moment a boy named Andy Quaid came upon the scene. The chickens were not cognizant of being watched by the rat, nor did the rat see the cat, nor the feline the dog, who had not noticed the coming of the boy.

A little chick wandered too nigh and he was seized by the rat, which in turn was pounced upon by the cat and the cat was caught in the mouth of the dog. The rat would not cease his hold on the chicken, and the cat, in spite of the shaking she was getting from the dog, did not let go the rat. It seemed to the boy that the rat was about to escape after a time, and getting a stone he hurled it at the colony. The stone struck the dog right between the eyes. The terrier released his grip on the cat and fell over dead. It had breathed its last before the cat in turn let go of the rat and turned over and died. The rat did not long survive the enemy, and beside the side of the already dead chicken he laid himself down and gave up the ghost.

The owner of the dog was so angry at his death that he is said to have come near making the story complete by killing the boy that killed the dog that shook the cat that caught the rat that bit the chicken in a yard on Clay street —Louisville Courier-Journal.

"May I?"

When she was asked to express an opinion on some trivial matter she looked timidly round with her clear gray eyes upon each of the masculine persons and said:

"May I?"

Here we had the ivy and the oak reduced to practice.

Every man in that group grew an inch or two in stature and in girth without knowing it. A new magnanimity stirred in him and he cried: "Certainly! certainly!"

I have met that "May I" woman a good many times since, and she always walked over the stoniest places of life with sylph-like comfort, for all the masculine persons put their necks down for her to step upon.

She is the superb phantom of the social circle, the mistress of the mo , the empress of the masculine persons everywhere.

Your ordinary masculine person doesn't want to be conjured. He wants to be cajoled. And in every set of pretty women who tyranize with their black eyes and coerce with their saucy conduct there is one gray-eyed "May I" creature who locks up all the men's hearts; and then in her own sweet and docile way, tortures and pawns and burns them afterwards, without so much as a protesting squeak.

Don't ask me to name them all. I have one in my mind now who clung to an observer with the delicacy of a tear and the sweet softness of an odor. But she put $200 a week in the bank and always said to the receiving teller with a winning pathos: "May I?"

And the receiving teller, feeling a thrill of masculine sympathy, always responded with an assuring "Certainly."

Such superb women are created to keep alive the masculine ideal of woman.

It would utterly die out if men could not go at intervals and refresh their memories with the angelic, impalpable character, set like a lambent flame on a most palpable physique.

I admire the "May I" woman. She not only wears an expression that, as Emerson says, appears to be looking for something better than she has ever found, but her innocent conduct always assures us that she has found something better than she has has ever looked for.—New York World.

A Plucky Fool.

A curious bet which was made by two New Yorkers one day this week illustrates, as well as possible, the point which has been reached in dressing at the Branch. During the afternoon concert at the West End the son of a wealthy banker appeared in a curious combination of clothing which attracted attention from everyone. Not to be outdone in this respect, another young fellow immediately repaired to his room, and shortly afterward emerged in an entirely different suit. The coat was a seal brown, with a large green collar trimmed with braid full two inches wide, while the trousers were "polka-dot," but so large were the "dots" that they might easily be mistaken for saucers. His appearance created a general laugh among the people assembled on the veranda, and he indignantly asked one of his friends to explain the cause of it. In reply the young man offered to bet fifty dollars that he dared not enter the dining-room that evening in such a dress. The bet was made, and, as it soon became noised about, everybody was looking for him during the dinner hour. The doors of the dining-room had hardly opened when he made his appearance, looking somewhat nervous and sheepish, but nevertheless dressed in the same suit. After gazing anxiously around the room as if trying to gather courage for a final effort, he walked boldly down the room and took his accustomed seat in the rear. It was indeed a victory over the crowd, and as he walked from the room two or three people applauded him.—Long Branch Letter in Philadelphia Press.

Joaquin Miller on the Model Farm, Ontario.

The Province pays $30,000 a year to maintain a school for the practical education of farmers. This school turns out annually from 200 to 300 well disciplined and splendidly equipped men to take charge of the most important, healthy and altogether honorable pursuit on earth. We, in the States, are accustomed to think if a man is fit for nothing else he can settle down on a farm and get on. We have made the farm the last refuge of the tramp. They here are making the farm the first place for the true gentleman. And this is right. We must have one of these institutions in every State of our Union, a dozen if necessary, to dignify and make easy and intelligent the office of the farmer. The trade of war is out of date, the lawyer's office is of doubtful calling, for what does it give to the world in return for his bread? The doctor's place is hardly desirable for a refined nature; but the Canadians have decided that the farmers hold the world on their shoulders and are standing truly by them. They have altogether more than eighty associations devoted to the culture and development of stock and grain. The Province of Quebec has an institution not widely unlike that of Guelph, Ont., only on a smaller scale. I did not visit this, but am told that it is conducted entirely by a lady. The Province pays $5,000 bounty towards its maintenance. As against them we have only little to show except the school in Michigan. Yet it is true that we have many institutions that profess farming. But I fear they do not practice it as at this model farm. Of course I cannot enter into details or attempt to digest the big book making their annual report on this place. But I may say as a cardinal idea they seek to be solidly practical; severely so; to keep the feet of the students down firmly down on the hard earth. They ignore Greek and all such nonsense, and try to teach common sense. Yet no ignoramus is admitted here by a great deal. Each applicant must be at least 16 years old, must be of sound morals and good health and pass a very severe matriculation examination if not a graduate of the many high schools in the country.

Joseph Cook hopes the day will come when "we shall have only one postage-stamp for the whole world." And then a nice fix we'd be in if some fellow should fold that one up in his vest pocket, and perspiringly fuse it against a small square of hard tobacco and two or three newspaper clippings. And that is just what would happen if the world got down to its last stamp.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, AUGUST 9TH 1883.

SAD RESULTS FROM AN EXCURSION.

The Owen Sound Firemen had an excursion to Midland City per steamer Magnet, which left the above port last Friday morning with over 500 passengers. There was considerable wind on that, as well as the two following days. The steamer should have returned the same night but owing to the rough sea did not attempt to leave Midland until the following day, and then had to seek shelter among the Christian Islands and did not make Collingwood until Sunday morning. During this time the residents of Owen Sound, (almost every family of which was represented on the supposed ill fated Magnet) were thrown into intense excitement. One, Mrs. Locke of the lake shore, Sydenham, died on Sunday from over excitement, she having a daughter on board the excursion steamer. The party arrived safe, however, at noon on Monday, being two and a half days overdue. The sad news proved fatal to Miss Lock, who on hearing of her mother's death was so overcome with grief that she died before she reached her home.

MASONIC PIC-NIC

Prince Arthurs Lodge, of Flesherton, held their annual pic-nic at Eugenia Falls, on Friday last, and though the day was very cool, even chilly part of the time, there was a large turn out. Maxwell, Flesherton and Markdale were well represented while the agricultural classes put in a very creditable appearance. Messrs. W. Masson and G. Ingles, of Owen Sound were present, and Messrs. Elliott, and Rudd of the town of Perth. The services of the Flesherton Brass Band were very acceptable on the occasion. About 2 o'clock the contents of numerous well filled baskets where placed in position making a fine display, and was surrounded by Doctors, Lawyers, Ministers, Merchants, Mechanics, Agriculturists, Printers. Hotelkeepers, with their wives and families all apparently determined to make themselves and others happy. We don't know that the ladies belong to the Masonic Order, but they show just as much enthusiasm and union of effort in making the pic-nic an enjoyable affair as the Master Masons possibly can do, and the increased success which attends each successive party proves that their efforts are not in vain. After the refreshments were disposed of, games were entered into and these together with the grand natural scenery of Eugenia Falls and its surrounding were immensely enjoyed by the party, which broke up in reasonable time, all well pleased with their day's sport.

OBITUARY.

Alexander Irwin, who departed this life on the morning of the 1st inst., was one of the pioneers of Artemesia. He was born in Sligo, Ireland, in 1798. being the only son of Christopher and Eliza Irwin of that place. His father died when he was very young, and he remained in the land of his nativity till 1850, in which year he emigrated to America, and, during the same autumn, settled at his late home when the forest for miles on all sides was scarcely yet desecrated by the woodman's axe.

Encountering the difficulties usual to pioneers and overcoming them by patience, perseverance and industry, is a part of the history of Mr. Irwin's life in the backwoods. But, time and circumstances, which change all things, in later years found him comfortably situated in a country teeming, not only with the necessaries of life, but the luxuries of an advanced age of enlightenment—a result which his own hand has been instrumental in producing from a region clad in nature's primeval garb.

Mr. Irwin has held a variety of elective and appointed offices while a resident of Artemesia, including that of Deputy Reeve (the first ever elected in the township) and a justice of the peace for 28 years.

He married in 1820 Frances, daughter of Lieut. Burrass, of the 47th Regiment of the British army, who served through Wellington's campaigns in The Peninsula and at Waterloo, and who subsequently died in India. They had a family of ten, eight of whom yet survive. His wife died in 1875, since which time he resided with his youngest son Henry D., who is a J. P, and one of the leading and most prosperous farmers in the township.

The subject of this notice was highly respected by all who knew him, was of a cheerfull genial disposition which together with a good education and fine intellect, rendered his society exceedingly desirable and pleasant, and though in his 84th year was active, cheerful and quite talkative to the last moment. He lived a consistent christian and died in the triumphs of faith.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR:—It is not my wish to encumber your valuable space with anything of a personal nature, but ever since I have been in Markdale, gross personalities have been flung at me by the Flesherton Advance. Why such is the case I know not? as I never remember giving him the least occasion to indulge in such ungentlemanly, uncalledfor and vulgar slang. I never penned and inserted three lines (as you know well) referring to the said editor, and why he so far forgets all that is honorable, customary or right in a man of his position and indulges week after week in such miserable attempts at puns against a private individual is a mystery to me. It is to be hoped, however, that he will desist if he is not totally ignorant and stubbornly bent on using, what might otherwise be called a local paper, for inserting useless slang of no interest whatever to his readers. Thanking you for space, I remain yours etc.

The house is noted for keeping a good table, and this spread did no discredit to the reputation. About 60 sat down and after full justice was done in this respect, Mr. John McDonald was called to the chair, and Messrs. D. Creighton and Thos. Gordon to the vice chairs. The usual toasts were drank and responded to, and a good time was spent.

HORSE THIEVES.—The country is just now suffering from a severe attack of horse thieves. Horses have been stolen in Paisley, Palmerston and Dresden, and our readers are cautioned to look out for the operators. It would be also prudent to avoid horse deals with unknown parties.

The lawn party given by the Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist Church on Monday evening, was quite successful. The Parsonage grounds were decorated by trees and Chinese lanterns. The choir and some volunteer vocalists furnished the music. The young ladies by the sale of bouquets, Russian cream and lemonade, added materially to the receipts. The nett proceeds were about $31.

A WARNING TO BOYS.—On Tuesday last a son of Mr. Fred. Taylor, Euphrasia, aged eleven years had one of his eyes destroyed by a stone thrown carelessly by a neighbor's boy. Mr. Taylor took his son to Toronto to-day to see if anything could be done for him and to endeavor to save, at least, the other eye which is now affected from the wounded one. Boys, do stop throwing stones.

Our townsman Mr. H. Foster has decided to leave this place, having purchased the stock and business of Mr. C. Price of Holland Centre. We regret having to part with our esteemed friend, yet we believe he is making a good moove, and we compliment the people of Holland Centre on their aquisition. Mr. Foster is a good business man gives close application to his business and is honourable in his dealings with the public, hence we can safely recommend him to the confidence of the people of Williamsford Station and vicinity.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT TO AN OLD RESIDENT.—It was with profound regret that the news was received here on Monday that James Patterson, sr., of Blantyre, had on the day previous nearly lost his life, while starting home from Church in Euphrasia. It appears that Mr. Patterson was backing up the team, Mrs. Jas. Paterson jr., being in the waggon at the time, when in in some way the wagon upset throwing Mr. Patterson out upon the whiffletrees. The horses then commenced kicking and every kick took effect on the head and body of the old gentleman. When rescued he was found to be insensible. He was speedily removed to his home and Dr. Maclean sent for. His wounds were properly attended to, but it seemed doubtful whether the patient would survive, but he rested better that night than was expected. As soon as the state of the wounds would permit it was found that he had received severe injuries on the abdomen, and that several of his ribs were seperated from the cartilage, if not broken. His head is a mass of bruises. The Doctor, however, entertains hopes of Mr. Patterson's ultimate recovery. Mr. Patterson jr., was bruised on the side, but not so seriously.—Monitor.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

STELLA;

STELLA LOSES HER TEMPER AGAIN.

"Mrs. Finch is my housekeeper and my slave in bondage; she is also my cousin by marriage." It will be understood that this explanation failed to convey to her a very distinct idea of the lady's social standing in the establishment. "You will find her along the second passage to the left, by knocking at the third door to the right."

"As I have never been in the house before, and there seem to be a great many passages, don't you think if you were to ring the bell for the footman and tell him to take me to her, it might be a better plan?"

And Mr. King was so much taken back by the absolute coolness of the suggestion, that he actually took her at her word and did so.

In this fashion Stella was shown into the smaller of the great drawing-rooms which ran along the whole of the garden side of the house, and where Mrs. Finch was accustomed to spend her solitary evenings after the master of the house had retired to his study.

As a rule, when Norman was at home, he sat here with her; but this evening he had not followed her after dinner, but had retired to his own room. Thus Stella was left to introduce herself to the only lady of the establishment.

"My grandfather sent me to you. May I have something to eat, and will you show me my room?" she said, rather hesitatingly, for it was natural that she should be less at her ease with this lady, whose existence she had never even heard of till now, than with the grandfather whom she had been long schooling herself to meet.

Mrs. Finch was not disposed to be very friendly with this girl, who had come, as she well knew, to be a rival to her own daughter; nevertheless, she was too wise to show the want of cordiality which she felt. To smile upon everybody was Mrs. Finch's maxim, and she received Stella with a certain amount of effusion.

"You poor dear, you must be tired out with your journey; of course I will order you something to eat, and come with me, dear Miss King, and I will show you your room. I had a fire lighted for you, though don't mention it, please, as Mr. King is so particular, and we all have to humor his little ways, you know. Ah! well, old gentlemen are all alke, you know."

"I don't think I know many old gentlemen," said Stella, coldly, for at the first words she felt instinctively how insincere was the woman before her.

"No? Ah! you will soon learn to like your dear grandfather very sure, my dear," answered Mrs. Finch, hastily.

"I like him now," answered Stella, rather to her hearer's surprise.

She had no desire to discuss her grandfather's character with anybody, and she felt that it was very bad taste in this Mrs. Finch to attempt to draw her into such a discussion.

"Come up-stairs and take off your things, Miss King," said that lady, with a trifle more of respect in her tone, dropping at once the subject that seemed distasteful to the strange young lady.

When they reached the bedroom that had been prepared for her, Stella asked her conductress one question:

"Is my Cousin Norman at home?"

"Yes, I dare say you will see him when you come down-stairs;" and Mrs. Finch lit the candles upon her dressing-table and left her alone.

But it was not until the next morning that Stella encountered her cousin upon the staircase upon her way down from her bedroom.

Norman colored like a girl; Stella drew herself up to her full height.

"How do you do, Stella!" said the young man, holding out his hand somewhat awkwardly.

Stella could not refuse to take it.

"I hope you are rested after your journey."

"Quite, thank you."

"You will not, I hope, find us very dull company at Wrexham."

"I do not mind being dull," answered Stella, quietly.

And Norman felt so utterly nonplussed in his little efforts at conversation that he showed her the way into the breakfast-room without making any further attempt to be agreeable.

Poor Stella! her pride was a real punishment to her. She could not forget that, to her, dreadful leaf of her past life, now more than a year ago, when Norman Allingham had dared to kiss her because he thought her a common girl, and had told her to her face the next morning that she was a virago for being angry about it.

All through the first breakfast at Wrexham the sense of shame that was upon her was almost more dreadful than she could bear. All through her grandfather's occasional questions and Mrs. Finch's little gush of amiable chatter she seemed to feel her cousin's eyes upon her, and to fancy what he must be thinking about. Every detail of that foolish escapade came back to her, painted by her disgust and dismay at herself in strong and exaggerated colors. How Norman must scorn and despise her; and what a bad opinion he must have of her!

His thoughts, had she known it, were of a very different nature.

Norman made up his mind once more that Stell's eyes were the very loveliest that he had ever seen, and that her beauty was so great that a wiser man than he was might be forgiven for trying to make his peace with her. Perhaps her temper was not as bad as he had imagined. Perhaps her recent sorrow had softened and improved her. Possibly a few kind and gentle words would efface her past displeasure to him. In short, Norman told himself, impetuously, what was the use of waiting for the other sister, whom he had never seen, when there was this deliciously fascinating Stella, with her blue eyes, and her tempting rosy lips, and her pretty, graceful figure.

If only she would smile upon him, Norman, just as she is smiling now at one of the old man's crabbed, half-angry speeches! How charming she would be if she would only send her blue eyes flashing round to his side of the table! There, she actually is looking this way!

But no; Stella meets the young man's eager gaze with a cold and unresponsive sternness, which provokes and attracts, even whilst it repels him.

But, after breafast is over, he watches his opportunity, and finds her alone, standing listlessly by one of the long French windows.

"Are you not going to be friends with me, cousin Stella?"

She looks up startled. Her cousin is standing close to her, looking down at her wistfully.

"I am quite willing to be friends," she begins, coldly.

"Only that you have never forgiven me," he objects. "Is my crime to be always unpardonable? Are you always so vindictive to other people as you are to me?"

"I cannot tell you that, for no one but you has ever insulted me," she answers, flushing hotly.

He bites his lip, and controls himself with an effort.

"You must not use such ugly words, Stella. Gentlemen do not like to be told they have insulted any one."

"People never do like to hear the truth about themselves when it is not pleasant," she says, scornfully. "No, I will live at peace with you, and I will speak to you politely when necessity obliges me to speak to you at all; but it will be better that you and I should exchange as few words as possible. And, as to our being on intimate cousinly terms, pray do not think of such a thing, for I can never forget your past conduct, and I can never forgive it!"

She looks very lovely as she utters this speech. Her cheeks are flushed, her eyes flash proudly, her lips tremble a little with her own agitation.

Norman, looking at her face, forgets the bitterness of her words, and thinking only of her great beauty, says a very foolish thing.

"You look so lovely when you are angry, that I have a great mind to repeat my offence, and take you in my arms and kiss you again!"

Stella turns upon him white with passion.

"How dare you!" she cries, furiously—"how dare you say such a thing to me! Oh! I wish my hard fate had never driven me to take refuge in a house where I am condemned to meet you."

"I will rid you of my society, Miss. King," answers Norman, who has turned very pale.

He makes a low bow and goes suddenly from the room.

He marches straight up into his own, and packs up his portmanteau, then seeks his grandfather's study.

"I am going up to town, sir," he tells him. "I shall go by the twelve o'clock train, I think."

"That is a very sudden resolve," answers the old man, looking up from his writing-table, where he is busy revising the weekly account-books which Mrs. Finch has just brought to him for payment. "What is the reason of it, pray?"

"I can't stand that girl's temper," said his grandson, looking down rather sulkily, and pushing away a footstool with his foot.

"Do you mean Stella? What is the matter with her temper?"

"It is dreadfully bad, sir," answers the young man with a short laugh.

"I have not discovered it," replies Mr. King, gravely. "I think her a very nice, clever girl."

Norman is somewhat surprised at this favorable verdict, for the old man is not given to taking sudden fancies.

"It is rather rude to go away just as she has arrived," he continues.

"Oh! I thought it was the other sister I was to be attentive to; there is surely no occasion to stay here for this one."

"Oh! very well; do as you like, of course."

Mr. King is evidently not very well pleased; but for all that Norman Allingham goes up to town by the mid-day train, and after he has gone Stella King, at the very bottom of her heart, is a little bit sorry that she has driven him away.

CHAPTER XI.

MAUD'S COMMUNICATION.

"It was a most improper and indecorous proceeding, Miss Finch."

"I am very, very sorry, Lady Dyson."

"Well, I beg it may never be repeated. I don't wish to say any more about it now, but pray remember that young women in your position should be very careful indeed in their conduct with regard to the gentlemen of the house they are living in. If it had been one of the servants, for instance, instead of myself, who had found you alone in an out house with Sir Edgar, whilst your pupils were running about, Heaven knows where, and in lesson-hours, too, it would have been enough to have made a scandal."

"My mother was with us," pleaded Lily, tearfully.

"Yes, and I am willing to allow that that was some mitigation of your fault; but you had no business to go out walking with Sir Roger at all. However, I will say no more about it now, as I see you are sorry; but I hope you will remember that if Sir Edgar is kind enough to notice you, and to talk to you occasionally, it will be wise and modest of you to be extremely reserved in your manner to him. Gentlemen are often very thoughtless, but it is your place to recollect always the very great difference there is between his position and yours. You may go now, Miss Finch."

Still trembling almost as much as at the first awful summons into her employer's presence, which she had received half an hour ago, the little governess went swiftly and noiselessly out of Lady Dyson's boudoir, and sought the retirement of her own bedroom.

She sat down on the end of her little white bed and wept bitterly. Oh! how miserable she was! Lady Dyson had not been harsh or cruel to her, she had indeed found fault with her in words that were well chosen, and even kind; but oh! how dreadful to be found fault with at all on such a topic! More than ever did Lily Finch realize the immeasurable gulf that lay between herself and the man she loved.

Nothing she felt would ever bridge over this yawning chasm. No miracle that could be worked would ever serve to transform that cold and haughty patrician dame into her own mother-in-law. To recollect the superiority of class over class, to bear in mind her own littleness, to be good in the position of life in which Heaven had placed her; but not to dare to lift her eyes above it—that had been the gist of Lady Dyson's exhortation. And Lily had understood her perfectly. Oh! how vain and futile were all her foolish dreams of happiness; how hopeless those wild visions of joy which sometimes, in the dead of the night, would make her heart beat tremulously when she remembered his words and his looks, and which made her now and again believe, despite her reason and her common-sense, that all would end happily for her some day.

Poor Lily cried till her pretty eyes were red and swollen, and her cheeks as pale as the white curtains of her bed.

"Oh! how I wish I could go away and forgot him," she cried aloud in her misery.

But she knew she could not go away, because her mother and Mr. King had placed her at Barfield, and would never allow her to leave it. Neither, at the very bottom of her heart, did she desire to go.

Meanwhile, down-stairs, in Lady Dyson's boudoir, the subject of Miss Finch's delinquencies was not yet done with. Not more than ten minutes after the governess's silent and tearful exit, the door opened softly, and Maud Dyson crept into the room.

"Mamma, may I speak to you?"

"Yes, my dear, what is it?"

"It is something I think I ought to tell you, mamma—something I think it right you should know," said, Maud, mysteriously. She stood behind her mother's chair, fidgeting her feet about upon the hearth-rug.

Lady Dyson was an eminently practical woman; she prided herself upon being utterly free from nonsense herself and upon detesting it in other people. She glanced sharply at her young daughter.

"Keep your feet still, Maud, and for goodness sake don't carry yours arms akimbo. I never saw anything so unlady-like in my life. Well, what is it you have got to say to me? Make haste, because I am very busy with my letters this morning, and have not much time to give to you."

Thus adjured, Maud, feeling that her dignity was compromised by her mother's unfeeling allusions to her feet and her arms, blurted out her intelligence with an abruptness that had the effect of well-nigh startling Lady Dyson out of her presence of mind.

"Mamma, I came into the school-room yesterday, and saw Edgar kissing Miss Finch."

For half a minute Lady Dyson was so struck dumb with astonishment that she did not know what to say; but with a rapid and comprehensive train of thought her resolution was taken almost immediately.

"Maud, you are a very silly little girl," she said, severely.

"It is quite true, mamma; I thought you would have been pleased with me for telling you," cried Maud, in an aggrieved tone.

"I am quite sure it is not true, and I am not at all pleased with you for telling me such a ridiculous story."

"But, mamma——"

"Please hold your tongue, Maud. I suppose you fancied you saw your brother and Miss Finch standing close together; they were probably looking over photographs. Gentlemen don't kiss anybody but their mothers and sisters," explained Lady Dyson, drawing somewhat upon her fancy for the boldness of the statement, by which it is needless to say that Maud was not in the very least misled. "You could not possibly have seen such a thing, therefore I beg that you will never speak of this silly fancy to anybody. Now run away, my dear, I am too busy to talk to you any longer."

But after her young daughter was gone, Lady Dyson laid down her pen, and sat for some time plunged in meditation. She pondered very deeply indeed upon what Maud had just told her. Of course she knew it must be perfectly true, for the child was not likely to have invented such a thing, and a girl of fourteen is quite as well able to judge whether two people are kissing each other or not, as though she were forty.

Lady Dyson had no doubt whatever as to the truth of what she had just heard; but she had not chosen to allow it to Maud, because she did not want to send Miss Finch away, and of course, as long as Lily was Maud's governess, it was necessary to uphold her authority to her pupils.

It would be very inconvenient in many ways to send Lily away. She was a good, industrious little thing, and did her work very well; and Lady Dyson knew how difficult a business it was to find a governess who would teach almost everything to four children for thirty pounds a year. It was long since she had had a governess who suited her so well as Lily did. Before her arrival everything had been chaos and confusion in the school-room arrangements. Once she had three different young ladies in the house in six months, and then there had been an interregnum, and for one melancholy month in her life Lady Dyson had to teach her own children herself, an occupation that she decidedly disapproved of. But ever since Lily's arrival everything had gone on smoothly and quietly, and she had had no trouble at all from the school-room.

Moreover, Lily was related to Mr. King, and it was he who had recommended her to Lady Dyson, and it would be very unpleasant indeed to risk a quarrel with her neighbors at Wrexham, to say nothing of Mrs. Finch, who would be down upon her like an infuriated wild cat were her daughter to be sent away for such a cause. No, altogether she did not at all see her way to dismissing Lily.

Nevertheless, Lady Dyson felt that if her son had actually gone to the length of kissing Lily Finch, it was quite time that his attentions to the pretty governess should be put a stop to.

She felt very glad that Maud's communication had been made after her lecture to Miss Finch upon the comparatively mild misdemeanor of her being found alone with her son and the turnip machine, for she had said quite enough already to her upon the subject, and she knew that it was not Lily who must now be spoken to.

To speak to Sir Edgar, however, was a more difficult matter, and one which Lady Dyson well knew might only bring about that very dreadful contingency which she was most anxious to avoid.

On the whole, Lady Dyson decided that it would be safer not to speak to her son about Lily.

That evening, however, as the mother and son lingered at the table together after the servants had left the dining-room, Lady Dyson said something to him about a little plot that had been in her head all day.

"Edgar, my dear, I am thinking of asking Lady Honoria Rosett to stay here for a little while—shall you mind!"

"Not in the least, mother," answered her son, as he cracked his walnuts. "Lady Honoria is a very handsome girl, and I have a weakness for handsome women. Ask her by all means."

Lady Dyson waited a few minutes, and then she said, rather timidly:

"My dear boy, have you ever thought about marrying?"

Sir Edgar looked up over the wine decanters at his mother, and laughed.

"Very often, mother dear," he answered, lightly.

"But I mean seriously, Edger, and with regard to any particular person?"

"Very seriously, mother mine, and with regard to—oh, half a dozen particular persons at the very least!"

Lady Dyson smiled. It was plain that Sir Edgar could not be meditating anything very desperate with regard to Lily Finch.

"I think, my dear, that Lady Honoria would make a very charming wife."

"I am quite sure she would, mother."

"She has beauty, rank, and fortune," continued Lady Dyson.

"Certainly she has; no one can deny her any of the three," assented her son. "Shall I peel you another walnut?"

"No more, thanks. Then I may understand that if she comes here you will think about her, Edgar?"

"I suppose if she is staying in the house my thoughts will inevitably be fixed upon her, more or less."

This was rather less satisfactory.

"I mean, my dear, that you will take it into consideration whether she would not be the most suitable wife you could possibly select."

Sir Edgar loooked down into his sherry-glass, and sipped it thoughtfully.

"I will take her ladyship's case into my gracious consideration," he said, so gravely that Lady Dyson could hardly be sure whether he was laughing at her or no.

Ten minutes later, running lightly up-stairs to fetch his cigar-case, the baronet encountered Lily upon the staircase. She turned away at his approach, and would have fled, but he stood before her, and stopped her.

"I am in capital spirits to-night, Miss Finch," he said, laughingly.

"I am very glad, Sir Edgar," said poor Lily, rather sadly.

"What do you think about?"

"I cannot guess."

"Lady Dyson has been recommending me a wife. She has beauty, rank, and fortune. She is an Earl's daughter, Lily. Don't you think I had better marry her?"

"Of course you will do as you like, Sir Edgar," she said, gently.

"Of course I shall, Lily," replied the baronet, and straightway gave Miss Finch a kiss.

But, of course, Lady Dyson never heard of the sequel to her successful conversation concerning Lady Honoria Rosett.

CHAPTER XII.

STELLA'S ANXIETIES.

It was dreadfully dull at Wrexham after Norman had gone away. As the weary days succeeded each other, one after the other, with interminable slowness, Stella told herself that any amount of quarreling with her handsome cousin would have been better than the utter blank of her present existence.

The great, gloomy house appeared in its desolate emptiness to be larger and drearier than ever. There was an old man shut up reading from morning till night at one end of it, and a middle-aged woman perpetually doing accounts at the other. What was a girl of nineteen to do with herself between two such uncongenial companions?

Stella's time hung heavily upon her hands; her light footsteps echoed weirdly along the silent corridors and up the deserted flights of the wide stone staircase. At meal times she met her grandfather, and the little war of words that generally took place between them on these occasions made the sole amusement of her life.

At other times she sat silently in Mrs. Finch's sitting-room with her needle work, or wandered disconsolately and aimlessly about the park and gardens.

It was on one of these occasions that Stella suddenly encountered a little, light-colored village cart, drawn by a fat gray pony, trotting merrily up through the park towards the house.

There was a pretty, soft-eyed young lady driving, a quiet little girl by her side, and two noisy, laughing boys in the front seat. There was a black retriever rushing on in front, and two little nondescript, broken-haired terriers scampering behind. Altogether it was such a vision of youth and brightness and animal spirits as poor Stella had not been blessed with since her arrival in England. She was so astonished and delighted at this spectacle of happiness and life (which, however, was nothing more wonderful than the young Dysons and their governess driving over from Barfield with a note to Mr. King from Lady Dyson), that she stopped short by the side of the road and gazed at these happy looking young people with their pony and their dogs, as though she had never seen anything so charming and so delightful in her life before.

Some instinctive sympathy of sex and youth made Lily pull up the gray pony when she reached that lovely girl, who stood looking enviously at her by the wayside, and turn to her with a timid smile. The two girls had never met before; but of course they had heard of each other.

"Are you not Miss King?" said Lily, timidly.

(TO BE CONTINUED).

The death of Capt. Webb in his attempt to swim the whirlpool at Niagara leaves Capt. Boynton alone in his noble work of foolhardiness. There are a number of things that have not yet been attempted by the indomitable Boynton. When he has rolled over Niagara's brink in a rubber ball, let him swim down the Croton aqueduct, go through the New York water-works and be squirted out the nozzle of a fire engine into a burning building. If he survives that ordeal he can drop us a postal card, and we will suggest something a little more trying on the nerves.—Detroit Chaff.

Japanese Workmen.

The special marks of Japanese art are to be found in the complete devotion of the workmen to their work and in the singular love of birds and beasts displayed by all. Both these features Dr. Dresser traces to the influence of religion. Shintoism, which made the altar or hearth an object of the deepest reverence and affection, led to infinite patience and ingenuity in its ornamentation; Buddhism, by insisting on the sacredness of animal life, implanted in the Japanese that tenderness of feeling for all animals which makes butterflies alight on the hands of children, and frees even beasts of chase from all fear of man.

Whatever be its origin, the evotion of the Japanese workman to his work, and his intense appreciation of all that is beautiful and of much that is grand in the sensible world, are alike unquestionable; and throughout its history generally the circumstances of the country have greatly favored the growth of these dispositions. The principle of division of labour, which is nowadays supposed to be the very foundation of Western civilization, is not unknown among them, the Japanese workman has always been disposed to carry his work himself through every one of its stages, whether his task be that of working in metal or lacquer, of preparing woven fabrics, or of pottery in any of its branches. Each workman thus looks on his work, while it is going on as on a child that he loves. It is in this connection in the same sense in which a poem or a picture is the creation of a poet or a painter; and the feelings which it excites in him are not less strong. He is striving after beauty in every shape, not after money, and he has his recompense in a way which must cause some surprise to Englishmen. In Japan the merchant, Dr. Dresser asserts, has no status whatever, though he be as rich as Crœsus. Money alone, he says, buys no position, and a prince will spend hours in conversation with a skilled workman, while the richest merchant would be beneath his notice. Some of the greatest of Japanese potters and lacquer-workers may be said to know nothing of money, the wife or child taking charge of the ware when it leaves the hand of the master, who takes no thought for anything else. The establishment of feudalism under the Daimios in no way affected the conditions needed for the growth of the highest art in Japan. The palace of the baron became to the workman what the monastery had been to him. He became one of the chief's retainers, clothed, fed, and lodged by him, the return expected from him being the production of the best work in his power: and with full golden leisure and freedom from care his power was increased tenfold. Thus has been developed not merely a patience altogether marvellous in the most minute and complete finishing of every detail—not merely a mechanical excellence seldom equalled and never surpassed—but a power of delineating life, especially the life of birds and beasts, which placed the Japanese in the front rank of the artists of any age or country. It is strange to see in drawings which exhibit great defects of general perspective, portraits of animals which actually live on the canvas or the paper. The metal-caster will not hesitate to cast a crowd of birds in their flight, the birds composing it being almost separate one from the other, and yet forming one continuous casting.

No adequate conception of Japanese art can be formed by those who are not acquainted with its colouring. The brightest and the strongest hues, red, blue, green, white, and gold, are employed in all their intensity. The greater part of the space to be covered is broken up by patterns interlacing each other often with astonishing intricacy; but some broad mass of leading colour is always interposed unbroken at definite intervals to impart solidity to the whole. It would not be too much to say that the magnificence of the Sainte Chapelle of St. Louis is but poor in comparison with the splendour of some of the greatest Japanese temples; and for majestic and solemn impressiveness, so far as we refer to colour, the advantage would rest altogether with the latter. We have to imagine the elaborate panelled vault of the ceiling soaring a hundred feet above us, while the overhanging roof, extending nearly to the railings of the balcony surrounding the shrine, softens the intensity of the sunlight, the light which ultimately reaches the ceiling being all reflected from a floor of black lacquer which has received the highest polish.

The art of Japan is, indeed, a subject which will well repay all the care with which we may study it. There is probably no reason for thinking that the study will make any Englishman blindly idolize it. It has wonderful merits. It ought to teach us some important and very needful lessons; but the forms which it employs, beautiful though they may be, fall short of the exquisity dignity, grace, and loveliness which mark the work of the Teutonic races while Teutonic art was still a living tradition, and which remains to us as a rich inheritance, until patient and honest work makes it a living tradition once more.

In mediæval times, when the work of an artisan became part and parcel of his religion, we had the same conscientious care devoted to the unseen portion as to the most prominent. All our great cathedrals and monasteries have examples of this thoroughness of work. The conditions of an artisan's life in Japan at the present day would appear to be parallel to that which prevailed in England in the feudal times, but the race of conscientious workmen has not died out in this country yet.—The Furniture Dealers' and Cabinet Makers' Guide.

Womanish Reasons.

"You would laugh to hear the excuses women make for the imperfections of their feet. I measured a nice lady the other day who had a bunion of severel years' standing. 'Oh,' she exclaimed, as I was about to begin. 'I am afraid you will have to make my shoe a little larger there. I hit my foot against the doorstep this morning and there is quite a swelling.' A lady told me this morning that something bit her while bathing and she supposed the poisoned water there had got into her foot. We don't pay any attention but go on measuring.—Shoe-seller.

"Stop kissing me," cried a pretty girl to her bashful beau. "I ain't kissing you," said he. "Well, ain't you going to?" she asked. He ran away like a frightened deer.

The cholera is spreading rapidly over the whole of Egypt, and the native authorities have requested the British to take the matter in hand. The various countries in the south of Europe are taking effective measures to exclude the dread visitant, and rigid quarantine measures are being adopted at most of the European ports. Spain has granted a million to enable sanitary measures to be promptly carried out, Italy, Greece, Turkey, and France have followed suit through the local authorities, and Britain, Austria and Germany have instructed their officers at ports of entry. It is devoutly to be hoped that the scourge may be confined to the East. In the meantime the sanitary boards and officers nearer home can not be too vigilant.

All neat cattle arriving in the United States from any part of the world except North and South America will be subjected to quarantine of ninety days, counting from the date of shipment. No quarantine for cattle imported from Canada is provided, Canada herself maintaining a quarantine for all imported cattle.

This, it is to be feared, would be out of the frying-pan into the fire. It would not and could not prevent strikes, while it would so add to the hordes of office holders as to give the Governments, for the time being, any amount of opportunity for corruption and wrong-doing. Then the railways would also have to be bought up. Why all this is just what Jay Gould and his confreres are working for. They hope to make "a big haul" and then they can go in for other ways of money making just as sure and just as oppressive. Government can do some things better than private enterprise can. But other things it cannot, as all experience makes manifest.

We are always rejoiced to get a good hint from any quarter, and it is therefore satisfactory to be told that Captain Webb had been called of God to swim, and that he had therefore accomplished the work for which he was intended and fitted. He must therefore have also been intended to be also unsuccessful in swimming the whirlpool, and as one working out God's purpose, according to the Rev. Mr. Jeffery, is not to be condemned. Yes, and the rev. gentleman might have gone further and said nobody, however foolish or foolhardy, is to be condemned, for in doing what he did and failing as he failed, he was carrying out God's purposes. We are afraid it cannot go that length. Still there is a sense in which it may be all true. But in condemning Captain Webb for a headstrong fool may not others be also working out the purposes of Heaven?

Is it never to be possible to have national disputes settled by arbitration? It would seem so, for the strong, the proud and the headstrong will always rebel against the decision if it go against them, while the league formed to enforce the award is always liable to be broken up, and the war which was to be avoided to be precipitated and embittered through the very means taken to obviate it altogether. And yet one can scarcely give up the hope that men and nations will by and by become so wise and be so animated by the principles of good sense and enlightened Christianity as to reject with horror the brutal butcher plan so long the fashion—of settling disputes by the internecine slaughter of multitudes who, busy as the devil is, have never had the shadow of a quarrel, and whose deaths could not in any way contribute to the solution of any possible difficulty.

We hope that the dictum of the Toronto magistrate "over the Don," to the effect that parents can be made responsible for the misconduct of their children on the public streets will be sustained. Something needs to be done to put down juvenile rowdyism, and that specially among the children of the comparatively well-to-do. Apparently many parents turn their boys to the streets to get quit of them. And how this works anyone can see. There is nothing too bad for these boys to do and say. They have regular pickets to watch for the appearance of the bobby, while the parents take their smoke and their ease at their door steps admiring apparently the precocious wickedness of their young hopefuls. Others who think that pandemonium let loose is not very nice for a quiet neighborhood have to grin and bear it, unless they are willing to quarrel with their neighbors and have their windows smashed and their doorsteps besmeared with filth by the rising glories of Ontario. Is this the issue of all our advances in education and religious instruction? It would seem so. The more's the pity.

In England, in the United States, and in Canada the number of business failures is reported to be increasing rapidly, being considerably larger during the half year than for some time before. In the United States the iron market—one of the most sensitive of any in regard to general business activity—is much depressed just now, and it may be that the lumber market will show a falling tendency next. Whatever may be the causes of these the effects are always felt very severely in Canada. It has been announced that the Robertsville Iron mine, in Frontenac County, one of the largest producing mines in Canada, has just been closed down for the year because of the depression in the United States Iron markets. The company owning the mine is composed of American iron manufacturers, and it is probably in a good position to judge in regard to future business prospects. It is not improbable that other mines may also be closed for the same reasons, and the results will tell considerably in regard to our year's business in the export trade, as well as in regard to our labor market at home.

Teacher—"What do you understand by sinecure?" Pupil—"Without a clergyman. A man who holds a sinecure doesn't have to help support the minister." The teacher was sorry that he couldn't sentence his bright pupil to instant death, sinecure: that is to say, without the benefit of clergy.

Justice Dispensed With.

We often have a good deal of circumlocution and delay in connection with our Canadian courts of Justice, but comparing them with similar institutions in the United States there is a great deal to be thankful for. Whoever has taken much pains to read up some important criminal cases in an American court, where there was sufficient money at command to keep the lawyers going, must have been surprised and disgusted with the delays sure to occur. The celebrated Gitteau case was one in point. Never was there clearer evidence of a man's guilt, never were there more ready and respectable witnesses, never was the popular demand greater for speedy justice, and withal the criminal had but little money at his disposal with which to carry on the scheme of delay; and yet a whole year elapsed between the commital of that great crime and the punishment of the criminal. The Star Route frauds furnish a still more lamentable instance. In connection with these the public had no reason to doubt but that great wrongs had been done, and the public treasury robbed of its tens of thousands, but the criminals made themselves rich out of their plunder, and having abundance of money at their command it does not seem possible to bring them to justice at all, through means of the ordinary United States criminal courts. Ever since the early days of the administration of the late lamented President Garfield, the iniquitous facts in connection with the Star Route plunder have been known, and attempts have been made to get a legal conviction of the scoundrels, but, aided by the power of money and cute lawyers, they have escaped scot free, and probably any further attempts will be abandoned. It required months and months before the cases could be brought to trial at all, and twice were the criminals successful in getting the jury to disagree. What potent influence was brought to bear on some of these jurymen is only surmised at. It is now announced that one of them, said to have been almost penniless before, is now building himself a fine house in a fashionable place, and others are giving evidences of much more wealth than they were ever supposed to possess before. The announcement does not surprise many people, however, as that was about what was suspected. The present jury system in the United States is being strongly condemned by many of the ablest and most earnest men of the nation. It is evident, too, that the plan of electing judges and many other leading court officials by a popular vote is attended, in many cases, with most serious consequences. The remedy must necessarily be applied at some time, and the sooner a sweeping reform is made the better for the interests of justice.

The Scott Act.

The only county in this Province where the Scott Act has been put to the practical test is Halton, and there is naturally a great interest felt as to its success or failure by both friends and foes. Recently a convention of the temperance men of the county was held, and from the report of the speeches made and the resolutions adopted it is evident they are reasonably well satisfied with its success, and they have confidence in the law as a prohibotory measure. Of course the very sanguine men who expect great things must be disappointed, but on the whole no important expressions of disappointment were heard at the convention. The difficulties in the way in the start in the enforcement of such a sweeping law are many and discouraging, but so far as the Act itself is concerned it does not appear to have proved defective to any considerable extent, as a practical measure, and with a year's experience in regard to its workings the temperance men of Halton strongly recommend their co-laborers elsewhere to work for its adoption.

The experience in the Maritime Provinces is still more valuable. In some parts of New Brunswick the law has now been four years in operation, and the attempt some months ago to secure its repeal in Fredericton, the capital city of the Province, was a failure. No more conclusive evidence could be furnished that the great body of the people have been reasonably well satisfied with the results so far. The Scott Act is now in operation in more than one-half of the counties of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and in the whole of the Province of Prince Edward Island, and while the temperance workers are active in pressing for its adoption in other counties, we have no evidence of any thing like a successful movement towards its repeal any where. These facts are worth many theories in regard to its practical success.

If the friends of entire prohibition are now anxious for practical success their way seems clear in pressing for the adoption of this local option law. It would be somewhat unreasonable to expect Parliament to pass a general law until the present measure has been put to a fair test. If a measure of local prohibition can be made fairly successful then it is evident that a general law would be so, for the difficulties in the way of a local law are certainly much greater than of one not so much circumscribed. If it is possible to carry a majority of the counties in a majority of the Provinces of the Dominion for local prohibition then it has been pretty clearly demonstrated that the verdict of the people is for a general law. The agitation has now reached a stage of great interest to all sides, and the results of the agitation of the next year or two will tell very decisively on what may be locked for in the near future.

Boston Bloods.

Mr. C. S. Hollis, Veterinary Surgeon Boston, Mass., certifies that he has made the great pain-cure, St. Jacobs Oil, the sole remedy in his practice for horse ailments, and considers it superior to any cure he has known in forty years. He tried the same great pain-banisher on himself for rheumatism and by which he was completely cured.

"Consistency is a jewel," but it does not add to its lustre to see a "consistent" church member make a practice of sitting around on the corners loudly lamenting the alleged violation of the Sunday ordinance, and then on a week day take his old shot-gun and go to another part of town, where it won't disturb his family, and blaze away until he is tired, regardless of the ordinance that he helped to make, and which was to put a stop to such nuisances.

The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. STELLA;

OR, AT CROSS PURPOSES.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Stella King and her sister Cecily, with their mother, are living for cheapness at Valency, where the girls are going to school. At the opening of the story the two girls are watching a fancy dress ball going on in the rooms below. An accident enables Stella to assume the character of a Swiss peasant girl, in which character she meets Mr. Norman Allingham, who, charmed by her pretty manner, kisses her after a dance, and thus incurs her undying dislike. Mr. Allingham, however, turns out to be her cousin, sent by his grandfather (and the girls') to visit the unknown cousins, in order to make up a match between the two families. When they meet next day, both recognise one another, and Stella indignantly refuses to have anything to say to him, much less marry him; and Norman goes off in a huff. Mrs. King shortly afterwards meets with an accident which leads to her death, and the two girls are left alone, to look to their grandfather. It is arranged that they are to start for his home, but at the last moment Cecily refuses to do so, having been "adopted" by the French people with whom they have been stopping, and who take her to Paris. Stella starts for Wrexham alone, where she finds her crabbed old grandfather, her cousin Norman, and Mrs. Finch—a cunning sort of personage, who has ulterior views of her own regarding Norman and her daughter Lily—a poor little governess at Lady Dyson's, in love with Sir Edgar, her pupils' big brother, who amuses himself by kissing her whenever he gets the chance, and is caught in the act by Maud, the eldest of the pupils; and horrifies his lady mother by being found alone with the governess while ostensibly explaining to her the merits of a new turnip machine. Lily gets lectured by her mother, and Sir Edgar is diplomatically sounded by his mother. Norman and Stella's meeting is not a friendly one. He threatens to repeat the kissing experiment; she loses her temper again, and he leaves the house in a huff the morning after her arrival, after which it becomes rather lonesome for Stella, until she makes the acquaintance of Lily.

STELLA'S ANXIETIES.

"Yes; and you are Mrs. Finch's daughter. How happy you all look!" with a little sigh.

"It is nice driving—it is such a bright morning," explained Lily, feeling almost sorry to look happy when that beautiful Miss King appeared to be so sad.

"What a darling pony," continued Stella, patting the animal's fat sides.

"Isn't he a stunner!" cried Willie; "he's my very own. Edgar gave him to me last birthday, and I ride him nearly every day—only sometimes I allow him to be put into this cart when we all want to drive together."

"That is kind of you," said Stella.

"We are taking a note to Mr. King, from mamma," volunteers Tom.

"Yes, and it's to ask you all to a party, and there are to be twenty people to dinner, and more in the evening; and Lady Honoria Rosett is come to stay with mamma, and this party is to be for her." This was from Alice with much eagerness.

"And there'll be lots of ices and creams," cried Tom, "and we are sure to have som of them sent into the school room, and Maud, lucky girl, will go in to dessert, and get grapes and peaches; but mamma does not think us old enough for that yet."

Stella and Lily exchanged a laugh.

"I hope I am going to be asked to this wonderful party," said Stella.

"Oh! yes, I know you are," cried Alice, for I heard mamma say you were to be, and your sister too."

"I am sorry my sister is not here yet, she will miss it."

"Oh! no, she won't, because it is nearly three weeks off, and mamma says she felt sure she would be at Wrexham then."

"I think we had better perhaps drive on,' said Lily, who began to wonder what further revelations Miss Alice would proceed to make.

"Oh! wouldn't you like to have a drive Miss King?" cried Willie, who was a pretty mannered boy; "because Tom and I can get out and walk, and you can go on in the carriage."

"Thank you; I should like it very much," said Stella; and the exchange was instantly effected.

That was how Stella and Lily began to be friends.

In that short drive across the sunny park up to the door of Wrexham Hall these two girls, who were both upright and good in their natures, although their characters and dispositions were widely different from each other, began to experience a sympathy and an instinctive attraction one towards the other, which in time ripened into a firm and fast friendship.

Stella was astonished to find that Lily was so unlike her mother, on whose account she had naturally felt undesirous of making her acquaintance; and Lily was delighted to meet in Miss King, of Wrexham, so simple and pleasant a companion, whose envy of herself—the poor little governess—filled her with unbounded surprise.

They had not, however, much opportunity on this occasion of improving the mutual liking which they felt for each other, as Mrs. Finch carried off her daughter to her own room, there to lecture her at leisure; whilst Mr. King sent for Stella almost immediately to go into his study.

"Have you heard from your sister, Stella?" he asked as she entered.

He was standing by the fire place with an open note, the one, evidently, which Lily had just brought, in his hand.

"Not since last week, grandpa."

"Then I must beg you to write to her to day, and tell her that she must be here without fail by the 24th, as I am going to accept an invitation for you both to dine at Barfield that day."

"I will write, of course, grandpapa, but I am not at all sure that Cecily will come; she must, of course, consider Monsieur and Madame Halevy's wishes."

Mr. King frowned.

"I would sooner bring up ten boys than one girl," he said, irritably.

"Fortunately for you, grandpapa, you have not been tried, or I think you would prefer the one girl," said Stella, laughing.

"Not if the girl were like you," replied the old man, with good-natured roughness.

He was getting wonderfully fond of this blue eyed granddaughter, with her frank, downright speeches; they were a refreshment to him after Mrs. Finch's sweet worded flattery and universal subservience to his slightest suggestion. Like most autocratic old people who threaten and bully everybody about them, Mr. King despised those who stood in awe of him, even whilst he delighted in frightening them.

"I wonder how you dare speak to your grandfather," Mrs. Finch had said more than once to Stella, "I should die of fright before I could contradict him in the way you do!"

And as to Lily, she literally shook from head to foot whenever the old gentleman came near her, and had never in her life been known to make him any other answer than yes or no.

So Mr. King disliked Mrs. Finch and her daughter, whilst Stella's sharp retorts and bright independence charmed and pleased his fancy more and more every day that he knew her.

"You will write to your sister directly, Stella?" he said, once more.

"Yes, grandpapa, but I doubt whether she will come; besides——"

"Besides what? I hate people who don't finish their remarks. What are you afraid of saying?"

"I am sorry to have incurred your hatred, and I am not the least afraid of saying anything. I think we neither of us ought to dine out so soon after our mother's death."

"Fiddlesticks! you have got black frocks, I suppose? You may depend upon it Miss Cecily has been galivanting about with your fine French friends to all sorts of entertainments. You will certainly go to this dinner party; it is my particular wish that you should."

Having relieved her conscience by uttering her little protest, Stella was content to let the matter rest. After all, she was only nineteen, and she had tasted but very few of the pleasures of her age, and the prospect of going out anywhere could not fail to be delightful to her.

She went away and obeyed her grandfather's orders by writing immediately to Cecily.

Now Cecily's letter had been a source of some trouble and disquietude to Stella. It was now nearly a month since the sisters had been parted. At first Cecily wrote, constantly and fully, long letters of delight at the novelty and enjoyment of her life. But of late her letters had become shorter and rarer, and now for a whole week she had not written at all.

Her last letter had been disjointed and incoherent. There was something in it about a handsome Englishman, whom Cecily said was worth more than all the Frenchmen she had ever met, and something about the mistake she had made in supposing that any friend of good Madame Halevy's would ever be nice enough for her, Cecily, to marry; and then, apparently, she had been called away in the middle, and had come back and had added a few blotted and blurred lines that had astonished and puzzled Stella very much indeed.

"I may not be able to write for some days," ran this incomprehensible postscript. "I can't quite explain to you why—some day I shall be able to tell you everything. Don't be anxious about me, I am quite well, and so happy, and I think so differently about things now to what I used to. Oh! Stella, do you remember the old days at Valency when we used to make such lovely day-dreams about what we would do when we grew up? Dear old Stella, I wish I could have you here just for ten minutes, to talk to you. Good-bye——"

And that little outburst of affection and tenderness surprised Stella more than the whole of the rest of the letter. For Cecily was not given to spontaneous expressions of feeling.

She had written every day to her sister since then; but had received no answer from her. Of course, Stella knew that Cecily must be quite safe and well, or Madame Halevy would have written to her; nevertheless, there was a vague uneasiness in her mind with regard to her sister, which she could not quite shake off.

She wrote to her according to her grandfather's wishes, and told her that he desired her particularly to come to England by the 24th, and she patiently but somewhat anxiously waited for the next few days, hoping to receive an answer.

A whole week, however, went by, and Cecily made no sign. Stella was beginning to be really fidgety about her sister. Still, she did not want to annoy her grandfather with her vague fears, which, after all, amounted to nothing of any consequence; and to make any confidences to Mrs. Finch, whom she disliked and distrusted, was clearly impossible. But, nevertheless, she was so uneasy and fretted by Cecily's unaccountable silence, that she almost made up her mind to write to Madame Halevy.

One morning there came to Wrexham a letter addressed to Cecily in a foreign handwriting, and bearing the Paris post mark. Then Stella was really frightened. She did not think it was from Madame Halevy; but it was evidently from some French friend who believed Cecily to be in England. Was it possible that she was no longer in Paris? And, if so—where then could she be?

In her confusion and disturbance of mind Stella put on her hat and jacket, and walked over to Barfield, and laid bare her trouble to Lily Finch.

Fortunately, lessons were just over, and Lily was at liberty to listen to her story. She was full of sympathetic interest and concern.

"What am I to do?" cried Stella, "I may be, of course, only making myself unhappy for nothing, and I can't bear the idea of making a fuss if it should turn out to be only imagination. Cecily would be so vexed. But oh! if I could only find out for certain that she was still at the Halevys—if I only knew anybody at Paris!"

"I think," said Lily, blushing deeply—"I think I know some one—at least that someone I know does. I mean Sir Edgar's brother is at Paris. I have heard Lady Dyson say he was coming home, but I am not sure when; and I am sure if he—I mean Sir Edgar—could help you he would be so glad."

The upshot of which confused and ungrammatical sentence was, that Lily, undaunted by the fear of meeting Lady Dyson, went her way boldly out of the school-room, and knocked bravely at the door of Sir Edgar's study.

Ten minutes later, however, she returned with rather rosier cheeks than usual; but otherwise with regret and disappointment written in her face.

"I am so very, very sorry," she said; "it is very unfortunate; Mr. Walter Dyson has just left Paris; Sir Edgar Dyson has just heard from him from London this morning, and he is coming here this evening."

So there was nothing more to be done in that direction.

Late that evening Stella sat by herself after dinner was over, in a little sitting-room on the ground floor, which her grandfather had allowed her to make her own. Mr. King had gone to his study; Mrs. Finch was in the third drawing-room; Stella sat by herself and pondered over the mystery of her sister's silence.

She made up her mind that she would write to Madame Halevy the next day and find out for certain whether her sister was with her. She felt sorry indeed that she had waited so long; but she determined not to lose another post.

All at once the fancy came to her to look out at the weather. It had been a wet afternoon, and the little Dysons had planned a drive to some distant woods on the morrow, and as Stella had half promised to go with them, they had been dreadfully anxious that it should be fine. Stella remembered this proposed expedition, and flung back the curtains and drew up the blind in order to look out. The window looked toward the front of the house; the light from her lamp streamed out over the gravel drive. It was a beautiful starlight night, clear and frosty.

Outside in the moonlight stood the dark outline of a woman's figure, wrapped in a long cloak, and a face peered closely into the room.

Terrified as she was, Stella recognized her instantly, and with hurried and trembling hands she opened the window.

It was Cecily who came in out of the night.

CHAPTER XIII.

CECILY'S ARRIVAL.

"Cecily," said Stella, in a terrified whisper, "has anything happened? What is the matter? For Heaven's sake tell me what it is!"

Stella was white as a sheet, and trembled in every limb; Cecily, on the contrary, looked full of spirits and life, her cheeks were flushed, her eyes sparkled; she seemed to be brimming over with excitement. As she stepped into the little room, she gave one rapid glance around it, then, seeing that her sister was alone, she uttered a short laugh of contentment.

"What good luck to have found you alone!" she cried, holding out her cheek for her sister to kiss. "I was wondering how on earth I should effect my entrance into this veritable Dragon's Castle. I really had not the courage to ring at the front door; the guardian of the fortress might have turned the dogs loose upon me. When I saw the light of your lamp, and your face looking out of the window, I could have jumped for joy."

"But what has brought you like this?" stammered Stella, in a bewildered way. "Why have you not written for so long? why did you not let us know you were coming? and what have you done with your luggage? How did you get from the station?"

"What a lot of questions all at once!" laughed Cecily, merrily. "Poor Stella! you look frightened out of your wits! Here, take hold of me—pinch me! You see that I am not a ghost, don't you? I really am my very own self in the flesh! Why, you don't look a bit glad to see me, and I thought you wanted me so much to come——"

"Of course I did! But for pity's sake enlighten me——"

"Now, please don't ask me all those bewildering questions over again—I am going to answer them. I thought I would take you by surprise, you see; besides, I was not quite sure if I should come to-day or to-morrow; and there was no fly at the station, so I have walked——"

"Walked! why it is two miles!" and Stella involuntarily glanced down at Cecily's boots. They were dainty little boots, and were scarcely soiled; they certainly did not look as if they had tramped along two miles of country lanes that must be very muddy after the rain of the afternoon. "And how did you find the way?"

"One of the aborigines directed me, and carried my bag—you see I have a dressing bag—as far as the park gates."

"But your box, Cecily—what has become of your box?"

"Oh, Madame Halevy was to send that on; it will arrive to morrow, I have no doubt."

"Madame Halevy!" repeated Stella. "Have you not, then, come from Paris? Why, where have you been?"

For the first time Cecily seemed a little disconcerted, and her eyes lost something of the merry assurance with which she had been giving her rather incredible explanations; her voice shook a little too, although she evidently tried to pass it off lightly.

"Oh, dear, how silly I am not to have told you before! Yes, of course I have come from Paris, only I spent the last two days with some other friends—Monsieur Halevy's sister, in fact—a charming woman, who was very kind to me. I have come from there, of course."

Stella felt that this explanation was rather unsatisfactory, but she did not know how to express her uneasiness, so she said nothing.

Cecily sat down and flung off her long cloak upon the sofa, and took off her bonnet. Stella could not help but remark that she was very handsomely dressed—almost too much so for a girl whose allowance was of the slenderest; however, she quickly recollected that her sister's dress was probably a present from Halevy. Cecily was altered too; there was a certain self-confidence and womanliness in her manner which was new to her, and which Stella set down to her experiences in the great world of Parisian society. She was looking very well, but seemed almost too excited to sit still.

She kept jumping up and down, examining everything, and chattered incessantly.

Cecily was taller than Stella, and was certainly a pretty girl, although her features lacked the great regularity and the charming expression which made Stella so singularly fascinating.

She had not Stella's sincere and candid eyes that looked so fearlessly and truthfully into the world about them, nor was there so much feeling in her mouth. Cecily's hair, too, was several shades darker than her sister's, and though it might be called fair, it lacked the golden gleam that crowned Stella's lovely head as with a diadem.

"What am I to do about explaining your arrival?" said Stella, perplexedly.

"Why, say, of course, that I arrived unexpectedly."

"But the servants—what will they think of you not having come in by the front door?"

Cecily laughed.

"Oh! you can easily say that you went to the door yourself to look out at the weather, and found me just coming up the steps. You can say that I've lost my luggage, and it is quite true that there was no fly at the station."

However little Stella cared about falling in with these ingenious and plausible inventions, she was bound in some measure to countenance the explanations which Cecily chose to make of the mysterious manner of her arrival at Wrexham. She was, however, a good deal disturbed and disquieted in her own mind.

"I must get you something to eat," she said, perplexedly; and she wondered whether she had better attack Mrs. Finch boldly upon the subject, or whether a private interview with the butler might not, under the circumstances, be a more politic proceeding.

"Oh! I don't want anything to eat at all," cried Cecily, settling the difficulty for her. "I have had a very good dinner, and I am not in the least hungry."

"A good dinner, Cecily!" repeated Stella, in amazement. "Why, where on earth——"

"Oh! I got some dinner in London," interrupted Cecily, hurriedly—"at the station hotel. I had an hour to wait, you know, so I thought I had better have something to eat."

After some further discussion, Stella settled that it would be better for Cecily to share her room that night, and that she would account to her grandfather for her sister's arrival in the morning in the best way she could devise.

Cecily made no objection to this, and the sisters retired to bed.

The difficulty of Cecily's arrival was got over more easily than Stella anticipated. Stella sought her grandfather's presence early the next morning, and in a few words announced the fact of her sister's presence in the house.

"Arrived last night, did she? Why was I not told?" was Mr. King's remark.

"It was too late to disturb you, grandpapa," replied Stella, evasively.

"Umph! Well, I am glad she has come at last. Send her to me."

"Cecily was so tired this morning, she is remaining in bed for breakfast."

"Then she can come into my study as soon as she is up. I suppose Mrs. Finch has looked after her property."

Stella murmured an unintelligible reply, and withdrew.

She found Mrs. Finch in the dining-room, making the tea, and dashed boldly into the subject on her mind.

"My sister arrived last night, Mrs. Finch."

"Your sister? Does Mr. King know?

"Of course he knows. If you will pour out a cup of tea for her, please, I will take it to her; she is not going to get up till after breakfast."

Thus things, somehow, were never enquired into, and Stella managed to account satisfactorily for the mysterious arrival of the traveller, and also for the appearance of the box, which came duly to hand at about noon the same day, by having recourse to that wise principle which tells us that, in any bad business, "least said is soonest mended."

Mr. King was under the impression that Mrs. Finch had known, and Mrs. Finch supposed the same of Mr. King, and neither of them, fortunately, thought the subject of sufficient importance to cross-question the servants about it. Only Stella had that uncomfortable and unsatisfied feeling about her sister, which comes to us when we know, by an unerring instinct, that we are being tricked and cheated into believing things that are not true.

Mr. King was at heart delighted by Cecily's arrival, and he was very impatient to see her; for, after all, it was upon the youngest sister that were now centered all his hopes for the fulfilment of his pet scheme.

But when he did see Cecily, he did not take a fancy to her.

She looked timid and nervous, and answered his somewhat rough cross-questioning with trembling monosyllables—not at all in the dauntless manner in which Stella had so happily taken his fancy.

"So you've come at last, miss?" were his first words to her; "and high time, too. What have you been doing with yourself, pray?"

"Nothing, Mr. King," said Cecily, tremulously.

She was genuinely frightened by the gaunt old man and his scowling eyes.

"What do you call me Mr. King for? I'm your grandfather, I suppose you know?"

"Yes."

"Very well then, call me so. And what do you mean by 'nothing?' I suppose you have had some reason for stopping at Paris with a parcel of foreigners, instead of coming here, like a good girl, with your sister, as you ought to have done, eh?"

He looked at her sharply; but Cecily made no answer, she kept her eyes cast down, and her color came and went rapidly.

"She's a goose," reflected Mr. King, disdainfully; "not a quarter so pretty and so clever as the other. I don't like her much. What a stupid mistake it was for Norman to take a dislike to Stella! she is worth two of this one. However, I won't grumble if he marries her—after all it is all I have asked him to do."

"Do you know," he said, aloud, "that I have plans for your future, Miss Cecily?"

"Yes, grandpapa."

"Oh! You know it? Well, I hope you will make no difficulties, and do what I wish."

"Yes, grandpapa."

"There, go away now—I've nothing more to say to you."

He turned from her impatiently; and Cecily, thankful to be released, fled from the room, with its oppressive book-cases and brown leathern chairs, into the comparative freedom of Stella's little sanctum.

Mr. King was very cross; he loved to strike awe, but he hated to be really terrified in his presence. He ed a bit as he drew his writing case him.

"Fancy the other saying those milk and water 'Yes, grandpapa's!' I should like to see her if I told her to marry her cousin, little spitfire! I do like a girl with a spirit of her own—this child is like a doll with cotton wool. However, she is my child all the same. Ah! what a pity Norman didn't fancy Stella!"

And then he began to write to his grandson:

"Come back as soon as you get this; the other sister has arrived. I am sure I don't know if you will like her; but as she is very different from Stella, you probably will. At any rate, she is as meek and as mild as a mouse, and I don't suppose she ever said an angry word or lost her placid little equanimity in her life; and that I believe, is what you like."

Meanwhile Cecily was exclaiming: "Oh, what a horrible old man!"

"Oh! no, Cecily; he really is kind at heart. It is only his manner. Do you know I am getting quite fond of grandpapa?"

"Are you?" cried Cecily, opening her eyes. "Well, I think he is quite detestable!"

THEY CUT HIS ROPE.

The Wonderful Adventures of an Artist Who Paints on Precipices.

"Give me a good silk rope—silk because very small silk rope will carry a man, and painter don't want to lug a heavy rope around with him—and I'll paint your name on the steepest precipice that ever was.

"When I'm sitting down my brush got a seven foot swing, and I set out to paint the words 'Love's Lung Lozenges' seven-foot letters. I didn't care if it took me a week, I wasn't going to be bluffed by them Tombstoners.

"Well, sir, I was brushing away and singing to myself like a mocking-bird when a stone came down and lit fair in the paint pot, splashing paint all over my rig. I looked up madder'n a hornet, and there I see two dirty Apache heads grinning at me.

"I didn't say anything, but the sight of them took the life out of me so that I dropped my brush, and I could hear it bounding along from rock to rock until finally it struck bottom. It seemed to me ten minutes from the time that brush left my hand until it struck the ground. Every time it bounced from one rock to another I seemed to say to myself, 'You'll strike there and there and there.'

"I knew the Indians were Apaches the minute I saw their heads, and I knew, too, that the Apache is the bloodthirstiest animal on earth.

"They grinned at me with their heads stuck over the precipice, and then one of them swung out his right arm and began making passes at the taut rope with a butcher-knife in his hand.

"I watched the knife flying about there with its sharp edge always turned toward the rope, until it made me sick, and I looked down for relief. Below me there was nothing but a little mesquit bush growing out of the precipice about half way down, and under that bowlders.

"Suddenly I thought of something, and whipping my whiskey flask out of my breast pocket I held it up toward them. They stopped grinning, the knife stopped wheeling around, and I saw in a minute that there were two thirsty Indians, and that I had a chance yet. But like a blamed fool I was sure, and didn't take enough care of the bottle, and the first thing I knew it slipped from my hand and smashed to flinders on the rocks below.

"The Indians gave one howl and then went the knife across the rope, and I followed the whiskey bottle.

"Did I get killed? Well, not hardly. You remember that mesquit bush? Well, the end of the rope managed to get wrapped around that bush in the fall, and it brought me up so sudden that the shock broke out four of my front teeth."

"But you were still a hundred feet above ground, and your rope only fifty feet long."

"To be sure; but everything was plain sailing now. I just shinned up the rope to the bush, got the rope out of the snarl and unravelled it so as to make two ropes, each half as thick each as the other was. See? The rope was plenty strong enough to bear me, thin as it was, and down I came like greased lightning, and then footed it back to Benson, where I bought a new outfit and went on ahead to 'Frisco.—An Awful Liar in Cincinnati Enquirer.

Reducing a Broken Neck.

Time was when a man's neck was broken that man was dead, but the time seems to be past now. One of the most remarkable surgical operations of the day was performed the other day at York, Pennsylvania, on Mr. Edward Swartz, whose neck was dislocated by the limb of a tree falling upon him. The case was a critical one. The man might die in the operation, and die without doubt he would at any rate if left untouched. Drs. Weist and Gross informed the unfortunate man of his condition, and he was willing to have the operation performed. Mr. Swartz calmly had his family called to bid him good-bye, expecting that the result of the operation might be a fatal one. Drs. J. W. Kerr, Hay, Long, Smyzer, Bacon, Myers and Charles Eisenhart were present during the operation. Upon making a thorough examination it was found that the fourth joint of the neck had been dislocated and fractured. The Rev. J. C. Deininger held religious services in the room, asking the blessing of God upon the work to be done and praying for a successful result of the operation. Dr. Hay took hold of the patient's head, and Drs. Weist and Long at the neck and shoulders, and the reduction of the fracture was sucessfully performed. The patient immediately said he felt relieved; that he had more feeling in his body, which had been paralyzed, and felt less pain. It is yet impossible to tell the result of the operation. If the spinal cord was not injured the patient may recover. The case attracts much attention among the medical fraternity, and considerable interest among the people generally, owing to the singular and critical nature of the injuries.

We do not remember to have seen it stated upon what authority Mr. Beckwith bases his claim to be the champion swimmer of England. "One Who Knows" says that his title to that position is not of the clearest, and that in England it is perfectly well-known that Jones, of Leeds, can give him a long start and then win; but that the latter natant has retired, and Beckwith claims to be the champion because he will not come forth from that retirement. Our informant has apparently had many opportunities of seeing Beckwith in the water in London and elsewhere, and readily grants that he is a good and clever ornamental swimmer, though Miss Beckwith is considered the more graceful of the two. But, says the gentlemen referred to, "I hope Canadians and Americans will not swallow the tale that Beckwith is our champion swimmer on his own ipse dixit, for we have more than one who can beat him hollow at a distance."

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Para and Amazonas, whose diocese includes the valley of the Amazon, has a plan for evangelizing the wild tribes along that mighty river. He proposes to construct a large ship. It will be suberbly decorated, and so contrived as to serve as a church. The floating cathedral will possess its pulpit and confessional, its organ and baptismal font, and all the church furniture requisite for a splendid exercise of Catholic rites. The Bishop hopes to make it, by reason of its elegance and splendor, "an object of just pride and glory to the Amazonas and of edification to the whole Christian world." Propelled by steam and drawing but little water, it will carry the zealous missionaries along the natural highway to the most distant parts of the country, as far as Bolivia and Peru, Ecuador and Colombia and Venezuela, and even to the most distant European colonies of Guiana.

"Knowledge is power,' said Lord Bacon, but we doubt if even his very learned lordship was ever aware of the tremendous power contained in a thorough knowledge of the snobbishness of mankind. Poor Tom Moore was not the only man who "dearly loved a lord." The Canadian papers have been full of particulars of an English swindler who has lately been "doing" the smart Canucks wholesale, simply by playing on their love of all that pertains to blue blood. He called himself by the most aristocratic names; said that he was the son of an earl, a duke, of we know not whom, and talked so delightfully of high life in England that he found ready admittance to some good Dominion circles. Albeit he met his match once or twice, and got a most unceremonious congé. Had he not, it is allowed, indulged in the most delicious gossip about society at "home in England," he would never have come over his snobbish dupes; but as he was able to give minute particulars of the ways and doings of "the old nobilitee," he was taken to the very hearts of several families. We wonder if he obtained his knowledge of things aristocratic, as did a brother swindler who some years ago "had" the "gawks" on a similar "lay." This latter had been valet to an English lord!

A private letter from London says that the fading season is bravely maintained by the presence of many Americans. "Good Americans," Mr. Lowell says, "when they die, go to Paris," but many of them previously go to London. The lobby of the House of Commons, says our informant, is becoming a great resort of the male members of the family. Amongst others who have been there lately is Mr. Garatt, President of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway. Mr. Garatt has just earned distinction in a characteristic manner. When in Italy last year he had an interview with King Humbert, who, recognizing a brother sovereign, paid him many courtesies. Mr. Garatt devoted some time to consideration of how he would worthily repay this kindness. At last he had a happy thought. King Humbert, like his father Victor Emmanuel, is very fond of horses. Mr. Garatt was possessed of an almost priceless animal, an Arab steed, said to be the finest horse in the world. Certainly Mr. Garatt had £9,000 offered for it, which, considering it is neither a racer nor a trotter is pretty well. He determined to offer "Damascus" to the King. So delighted is his Majesty with the present, and so profound is his admiration for the beautiful horse, that he means to have a model of it, life size, carved in pure marble.

It is not always safe to quote without first intimating that you are going to do so. It is not very long since a member of the English House of Commons called down upon his head the thunders of authority by saying that "some damned good-natured friend" had told him so and so. Of course when he explained that he was only quoting from Sheridan, nothing further could be said, and laughter took the place of denunciation. We are reminded of this incident by something which happened in a house where we were visiting not long ago. He was in the drawing-room waiting for a summons to luncheon, when from below there issued an appalling sound as of the smash of a whole trayful of glass and crockery. All were either relations or intimate friends, so, ladies included, all ran down to see what had happened. Some of the children were dancing round the wreck in huge glee, and were promptly accused by the hostess of doing the damage. But mine host arrived at once at the conclusion that the maid was the culprit, and had fled in hopes that the blame would be laid upon the youngsters—as was the case. And that wicked paterfamilias cried aloud in his wrath: "Destructible, damnable, deceitful woman!" Horror on all sides, indignant protestations from the ladies, and no condonation of that atrocious language, until mine host, astonished at the tempest he had created, explained that his words were neither his own, nor were they personal, but merely a quotation from the poet Otway! Then a calm of despair, and a picking up of the pieces.

Chinese ingenuity has invented a new plan of protecting carrier pigeons from birds of prey. A whistle, consisting of ten small bamboo tubes, is, by means of a thread which passes under the wings, fastened to the pigeon's tail. In flight the rush of air through the tubes produces a shrill sound, and it is said that birds of prey are thus kept off.

A long letter from Leigh Hunt to Robert Browning appears in one of our foreign contemporaries. The writer justly accuses himself of "terribly digressing," and promises that in future his letters shall be "of reasonable dimensions," if Mr. Browning encouraged him "with a few words in answer to them." About two-thirds of the communication is occupied with extravagant praise of Mrs. Browning's Aurora Leigh, and with first and last lines (or half-lines) of the passages that Hunt most liked in Robert Browning's poems. "Did it ever strike you," he asks, "how frightful it would be to be wholly prosperous and happy?—happy all your life? I think or fancy it would have made me look upon myself as a sort of outcast from the general lot and its claims, doomed to perish wholly and be put out, as a thing completed and done with. The incompleteness argued against us all here is surely our claim hereafter—incompleteness of joy, incompleteness of knowledge, incompleteness of nature. I think God means to round all these things in human want and aspiration, just as He rounds orbs or oranges. He does not incomplete anything else. Why should He leave us poor and anxious imperfections incomplete?"

MARKDALE, AUGUST 16TH 1883.

BEAUTIFUL LANDSCAPE.

A scenery, which is perhaps unsurpassed in Ontario, can be had by a drive from Markdale to Eugenia Falls via the 7th line Euphrasia to Wiley's mill, thence per Kimberly.

After leaving the seventh line and proceeding about half a mile. a view suddenly breaks in upon the astonished eyes of the traveller, which is simply magnificent ; the Valley which is now about half a mile distant, is several hundred feet below. Through it runs the Beaver River, on both sides of which are beautiful farms up the monntain slope dotted with fields of grain now in various stages of maturity from a deep green to the golden shade of the harvest fields, also the blocks of beautiful forest, and when the air is clear the Georgian Bay can be seen over Thornbury, and the town of Penetanguishene which is 60 miles distant. This view so varied and vast, and yet apparently so close to the spectator, is one of beauty and grandeur seldom witneessed. A traveller who accompanied us over this route last week. having been through the greater part of Ontario, said this view surpassed anything he had witnessed in the Province. The scenery along the way from Kimberly, (which is situated in the valley less than a mile from the said place) to Eugenia is also handsome, while the Falls with its towering rocks and dismal glen lends enchantment to the pleasure seeker, and is a very popular resort for pic-nic parties from far and near.

REV. FATHER WALSH'S LECTURE.

Last Monday evening the general public of this section of country were treated to a discourse upon general matters attracting public attention at the present day. It will be remembered, that Father Walsh was Parish Priest of Artemesia, Glenelg, and Proton, but removed to Europe some four years ago, and his return is hailed with pleasure by his parishioners. He has been edifying his friends by delivering a series of lectures, one of which was delivered at the R. C. Chapel, on the 8th line of Glenelg, last Monday evening.

The Suez Canal question was taken up, and discussed ably, with a slight tinge of Franco bias, but in dealing with the French people, both morally and socially, the Rev. Lecturer pictured to our mind a state of moral depravity, bordering upon the state of things as they existed just prior to the bloody outbreak that has since characterized France as an in human nation.

Father Walsh, as in duty bound, paid his devotions to some church, and accordingly went to the St. Sulphians, but did not find the same Deistical solemnity as was practiced in our back woods of Canada, on the whole he drew an unfavourable comparison of France as compared with Britain.

His reverence drew a vivid picture of the social evils that must entail upon the French nation for their desecration of the Sabbath—especially in the ungodly practice of running railway trains.

His Reverence gave a minute discription of the cultivation of the vine, mulberry and the treatment of silk worms, the fabrices from the latter being so much admired by our mothers and sisters, and we might almost say, our wife. We did not appreciate the Rev. Gentleman's description of our old metropolis London. In a city of four millions of humanity, there must necessarily be a "squalid misery," but we must pay a tribute of respect to the Rev. Lecturer for his mead of praise in favour of British morality. One point especially attracted our attention, What causes evil dispositions in Irish Christians ? and what causes decay ? His reverence uttered a severe denunciation upon the murderers of Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke, and expressed a high eulogium upon Canada, the land of his birth, where every man could be free who abstained from sin and wickedness

At the close of the lecture, Mr. C. W. Speers addressed the audience, eulogizing the address delivered by Father Walsh, upon the subject coming under this observation during his stay in Europe.

This morning shortly after 3 o'clock a fire broke out in the upper story of the Coulson House, Owen Sound. The whole building was destroyed from the first floor up.

DEATH OF ALEX. P. LOWRY.

Mr. Alex. P. Lowry, city editor of the Mail. died at an early hour yesterday morning at his residence in Gerrard street West, after two months of acute suffering, in his 32nd year. By the death of Mr. Lowry the press of Toronto looses one of its most promising members, and the newspaper men of the city loose one of their most genial comrades. Mr. Lowry like all successful reporters, drifted naturally into the ranks of daily newspaper life. He received his rudimentary training at the "case," a qualification which has been the back bone of the majority of American and Canadian reporters and editors. Many of the brightest minds of the daily press commenced at the bottom rung of the ladder, doing duty as printer's 'devil,' galley boy, compositor, proof-reader, and then into the reporters' rooms.—Toronto World.

DEATH Of Rev. Jas. CAMERON.

The death of Rev. Jas. Cameron, Presbyterian of Chatsworth, which took place on Monday the 13th, will be sad news to his many friends throughout the county. Mr. Cameron has been a resident of Chatsworth a great number of years, and was highly respected by all who knew him. His ability in the pulpit together with his charitable and earnest christian department has won for him a host of fast friends who now mourn their loss.

Deceased has been in poor health for some time, which latterly brought on Chronic Diarhœ, and on Monday the 13th death ended his suffering. He was 54 years of age.

The following we received from Mr. W. F. Doll, on Friday last the 10th.

Medicine Hat, Aug. 2, 1883.

Sesketchewan Hotel.

To the Editor of the Standard

DEAR SIR :

I promised to drop you a few lines from the N. W. Am now about 900 miles West of Winnipeg and something like 100 from the Rocky Mountains, where I intend going by first train to-morrow. I have met a great many people from Grey Co. Since I left Winnipeg some fifteen days ago. Business throughout the N. W., that is. West of Winnipeg, is quiet, but not as quiet as in some towns not far from Markdale, in Ontario. The crops West of Winnipeg for some 300, and North of the C. P. R. are good, but South and West, and especially here, everything in the shape of grass is burned up with the sun. For hundreds of miles West of QuAppelle there is scarcely a blade of grass or green leaf, the ponds of water are dried up leaying the grounds covered with white crystalized alkali. There are a great many Indians to be seen along the C. P. R especially at the stations. In looking at their painted faces and general dirty appearance I could not see where the noble red men came in, they are ten times more filthy than pigs, and will eat anything. I have seen their Sun Dance, where they torture themselves to become a brave, they push a sharp peg in each shoulder to which they fasten leather strings which are fastened to a young sapling tree which is bent, if the Indian can hang that way until the flesh breaks without food or driuk he is made a brave. sometimes they hang there from 20 to 30 hours.

Wood is very scarce here but there is coal enough within 6 miles of Medicine Hat to supply the whole world for a 100 years, it is as plentiful as the rocks East of Winnipeg and is bursting out of the ground in many places. Apples here are 25 cts. each; whiskey, 50 cts. a glass and scarce at that. We live on canned fruit, Buffalo and Antelope meat, no potatoes or greens for many hudred miles from here. Everyone here lives on the C. P. R. who pay about $1,000,000 per. month to their employees West of Winnipeg. Rattle snakes are very plentiful here, a man was brought in yesterday who died from the effects of a bite. The R. R. Fare from Port Arthur to Calgary and return is $96. Have only been in bed once in five days, but am not working for nothing. I met W. Trimble, of Flesherton, here.

The weather is oppressively hot during day time and very cold at night.

Business generally is overdone, but the jewellry business is something new here. I sell to all the stores here. About a week ago I was lost on the prairie, while driving from Brandon to Minedosa, and slept on the bare ground five or six miles from any house.

The farms round Minedosa are first class and crops good.

Yours Truly,
W. F. DOLL.

To the Editor af the Standard,

DEAR SIR :

Herewith I send you a copy of my reply to the friendly note of F. McRae, Esq., relative to rumours respecting irregularities in my accounts with the Township of Glenelg.

(COPY)

F. McRae. Esq., Reeve of Glenely, Glascott P. O.

DEAR SIR :

Your favour of the 27th inst., (yesterday) received, and in reply I beg to that I do appreciate the candid manner in which you have given me notice of reports circulated against me I can assure you that I will take the first opportunity of correcting such reports, more especially as I am well aware from a confession made by a person whose ill balanced mind is the cause of the slanders. Investigation in those rumours I desire, and feel within my own breast. The consciousness of inocence—my desire is to prove to my collegues in Council and the ratepayers of Glenelg, that all matters transacted by me will bear the closest scrutiny. The Auditors' Report as printed and that checked from the written report and Treasurer's accounts will bear testimony to the accuracy of my stewardship.

Respectfully Yours,
THOS. MULLARKY.

Kimberly.

From our own Correspondent.

Kimberly is the largest village in Euphrasia, and is the best place for a cheese factory, say, in the county.

The village would be the gainer if it could trade a local preacher for a shoemaker, that is, if it was a good shoemaker.

The taking possession of the disputed territory by the Ontario Government does not affect Kimberly to any great extent, all hands appear satisfied.

Mr. Phillips, one of our store keepers has purchased lot 33, con. 12 Artemesia, from J. W. Armstrong, of Flesherton, and is going to erect a saw mill thereon.

Harvesters are getting very plentiful, every farmer of any considerable extent haying secured one. I mean a machine, the other harvesters are very scarce and asking high wages.

We are afraid that the purchase of the T. G. & B. Rv. by the C. P. R., will flight our prospects of having the Credit Valley Ry. extended through here as they seem to have now control of both the above roads.

Fall wheat harvest is well through and is not more than half a crop, having been winterkilled and badly rusted. Spring grain of all kinds look well, and prospects are good for an abundent harvest. Potatoes are good, fruit, and plums are a good crop.

NOTICE.

AS I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately.

FIRE.—A very disastrous conflagration took place at Proton Station on Tuesday last. The saw mill belonging to Nelson Bros., together with about 100,000 feet of lumber, was entirely destroyed. The work of destruction was very rapid and complete. It is supposed, that the fire originated near the smoke stack. The mill had been running, but the men had gone to dinner, when the fire was discovered. Nothing was saved, the work of destruction was so rapid. The loss will be heavy as there was only a comparatively small amount of insurance. A policy for $800 had just been issued by the Standard Insurance Company, on the lumber. We have not heard what the total loss will be. The section men succeeded in saving Proton Station.

The English Church Garden Party at Mr. David Madill's Osprey, on Thursday Evening, was a grand success. There was a large turn out and enjoy-

The Police Trustees have done a good job in building and repairing sidewalks, yet there is a few bad holes and some loose plank which are dangerous to the pedestrian.

Rev. Scott, will lecture in the Methodist Church, Markdale, on the evening of Friday Aug. 17th. The town ministers are expected to speak. Mr. Scott has been spending the last three months South in Florida, and will give some account of his travels. Object to organize a lodge of the Sons of Temperance.

"Say, Mister, have you been in Markdale?"

"Yes!"

"Was you into McFarland's?"

"Yes: And I bought a chest of that famous Tea!"

"Did you: Well that is just what I am going for to-day!"

"Well, if you want to get one you had better hurry up, I saw four go away while I was getting waited on!"

In Lapland the sun never goes down during May, June, and July, but in winter, for two months, he never rises at all. His place, however is somewhat supplied by the wonderful northern lights, which flash and flicker in the grey skies. They look like fires of a thousand shapes and colours. Now like clowns, and now like comes; now like flashing nets, and now like streamers of silk; now like banners, and now like arches—these welcome guests make a night beautiful.

ROWDYISM.—A most disgraceful drunken brawl took place in this village, last Friday night, when a number of our young men, from whom we would expect better things, became intoxicated and raised a fearful racket on our streets to the great annoyance of citizens desirous of resting peacefully in midnight slumbers. We are strongly inclined to give the names of the parties, but forbear this time, but remember boys, if such a disgraceful occurrence should be repeated, every name will be published regardless of consequences.

Captain Webb's death has brought out the statement that Boyton once conceived the plan of floating down the Niagara rapids in his rubber suit. But with more caution than Webb exhibited, he marked and numbered several railroad ties and sent them afloat above the bridge. When they were recovered below the whirlpool and Boyton saw the ugly dents and scars upon them he wisely turned his back upon Niagara.

These wretched suicides on account of financial difficulty remind us of the anecdote of Johnson, who may have been brutal in his criticism, but who told the truth nevertheless. "Suppose," said Boswell, "a man has been guilty of a fraud that he was certain would be found out, would not suicide be justifiable?" "No, sir," was Johnson's burly answer. "In that case let him go to some country were he is not known and not to the devil, sir, where he is known."

KINCARDINE, Aug. 13.—Dr. McGregor, who practised at Ripley but lived here with his wife, was found about half past seven this evening in rear of the Elgin Hotel wit his throat cut, lying in a pool of blood quite dead. A small knife was open at his side, and and a new revolver was in his pocket at full cock. No cause is known for the rash act, except that he has been drinking heavily for sometime, and it is supposedd he was under the influence of liquor to-day. No inquest will be held.

The potatoe crop around Toronto is said to be rotting fast.

Mr. Dunlop has improved the appearance of his building by painting the front.

Mark & Will. Armstrong are busy fitting up the machinery in their turning factory. A car of machinery was unloaded at the station on Monday for them.

The Sabbath School excursion on Wednesday, from Flesherton and Markdale was well patronised. The day was beautiful and all parties appeared to enjoy themselves to the full There were seven coaches comfortably filled, and the number would doubtless have been greatly augmented had it been properly advertised. We knew nothing of the arrangement until after our last issue was published or we would have gladly given a notice.

A HEARTLESS DAUGHTER.—One day last week Maggie, a daughter of Hill, who is employed as hostler at the Middaugh House, decamped for the States with $235 of her father's hard earnings. Hill had a payment to make on a mortgage in a few months of $250, and had this amount saved for the purpose. The girl who is only about fifteen years old, left by the morning train, her father suspected nothing until the afternoon, when one of the train hands mentioned to him the fact, of his daughter being on the train. It is conjectured that the girl has been instigated to commit the rash and unnatural act, by a designing person. The poor girl will likely pay dearly for her folly and her ultimate end is not hard to imagine. Hill was a kind and idulgent parent, perhaps too much so.—Durham Chronicle.

FIRE AT SHELBURNE, Aug. 13.—On Saturday night at half past eeight a fire started in Noble's bakery, situated in the centre of the business portion of the village. A great conflagration seemed imminent, but by the strenuous efforts of the citizens the fire was by midnight under control. the buildings consumed were occupied by F. A. Campbell, grocer; R. A TRIO OF TRIPLETS.

A number of ladies at Philadelphia and New York spending the summer at Island Heights are actively engaged in raising donations of money and clothing for a Mrs. Johnston, residing in a small cottage at that place, who has just given birth to the third set of triplets. The latest arrivals are three chubby, crowing children, the very pictures of health—and all girls. The only way that they are distinguished from each other is by their clothing, which some of the ladies had mischievously marked "Faith," "Hope," and "Charity."

A SINGLE RED HAIR.

The Clew by Which a Florida Murderer Was Identified—A Member of a Wealthy English Family Sentenced to Death.

A letter from Jacksonville, Fla., to the Atlanta Constitution says: The trial of one of the most sensational cases ever before the courts of this state has just been concluded in Orange county. A little over two years ago a strange man arrived in that county bearing a letter of introduction to Mr. J. E. Graham, manager of the Sanford company, from Mr. Gray, of London, England, one of the stockholders. The stranger was introduced as a nephew, Archibald W. Newton. Mr. Graham was authorised to advance him $83 per month, any more to be at his personal loss. The habits of Newton were taciturn, and it was not long until he was a thoroughly hated man. Several acts of forgery were charged against him. Rumors reached this country from England that he had drugged and outraged a woman named Polly Bowron. Recently he sent money to England for Kate Bowron, a sister of his alleged victim. Meeting her in New York, he married her. The couple returned to Orange county in the early months of the winter. Newton suddenly became flush of funds. He was wont to exhibit bills of $50 and $100, and negotiated for the purchase of an orange grove on Lake Crystal, $25,000 being the price agreed upon. This sudden acquisition of money was the subject of much talk, which was quieted by saying that a legacy had been left his wife, whose people were very wealthy.

While this was going on another topic of suspicion presented itself. There lived in Orange county, near Crystal Lake, a man named Samuel McMillan, who bore and was supposed to carry a large sum of money on his person. He owned a valuable grove, the sale of which he was negotiating with Newton, who, with his wife, lived near by. He knew the habit of McMillan of carrying money about his person. On Saturday evening, Sept. 30, McMillan was last seen alive half an hour after sunset in company with Newton walking towards Newton's house. He never returned to his home, and after some days his neighbors became anxious and instituted a search for him. On the 7th day of October his body was found in Crystal Lake. Around the waist was suspended a sack in which was a pot full of nails. The nails were found to be the property of Newton, who was then put under arrest together with his wife, against both of whom suspicion had already been excited from the fact that immediately after the disappearance of McMillan they were both seen flush of money. Newton paid off all his debts, took a trip to Jacksonville, deposited $430 in bank, bought a buggy and on his return purchased furniture, etc. His wife remained in Sanford, purchased new dresses, etc. The discovery of the dead body with the rope, nails and pot, added to the remarkable behavior of Newton during the search, led to his arrest, and in the preliminary trial it was proven that he had borrowed a revolver from one Fred True, and on the morning of the murder had told True that he had fired one shot from it at an alligator the night before. McMillan's head was found a few days after the body in the water near the same spot, and in the back of his skull. On the brains being taken out a bullet dropped out, which appeared to fit exactly the pistol Newton had borrowed from True and which Newton's wife returned to True the day after their arrest with one bullet missing. On this evidence Newton was held. On the case being called the accused sought a continuance on the ground that he expected to prove by his wife's brother, James Bowron, that he had invested for her $25,000, which Newton had ordered him to send to Florida to purchase a grove near his (Newton's) residence.

THE REPUTATION OF BEING A MISER,

The trial took place before Judge Cocke, well known as a member of Florida returning board of 1876. The state was represented by Capt. St. Clair Abrams, who announced his intention of proving that the money which Newton had been spending was stolen from the murdered miser. Facts regarding both parties, as detailed above, were fully substantiated. The sensation of the trial occurred when counsel for the prosecution walked down the aisle followed by a medium sized, dark-haired woman, evidently a foreigner of the lower class. As the stranger got abreast of Mrs. Newton she turned and peered into her face saying:—"Why Kate!" The prisoner, as he looked up and recognized the woman, flushed until it seemed the blood would burst from his neck and cheeks, while Mrs. Newton turned deadly pale, and remained several seconds as if petrified by amazement. The presence of this woman in America was a complete surprise to the defence, as the counsel for Newton subsequently admitted in open court. Her testimony was listened to with breathless interest, as she told how, in October, 1880, Mrs. Newton, then Kate Bowron, came with her sister Polly to her house in London to rent a room. They had no baggage with them, and it afterwards transpired that they had no clothes whatever save the suit they had on. They were wretchedly poor. Kate obtained work as a Mrs. Ford, and was employed in making fur hats. When she lost her situation she was for weeks almost starving and could not pay her rent. Newton sent her money while she was there, and soon after Kate returned to Hull to her mother. From this place she wrote three letters to Mrs. Jones, which were produced and read in evidence. The first speaks of her arrival in Hull and her inability to get work and describes her intense dissatisfaction at being again in Hull. The next letter asks her to register a letter to Newton, and states that Newton has promised to send her money to bring her to America, and she looks for it in the next letter from him. The third and last letter reports that her letter has come at last, and announces that she would be in London in a few days to start for America. Sure enough she arrived in London, and went to Mrs. Jones, from whose house she went to the steamer to go to America. In this last visit she told Mrs. Jones that Newton had sent her £30 ($150) to pay her expenses, but she had let those at home have some, and she was afraid she had not money enough to pay for a telegram announcing her departure from England, and she expressed fears that she would have to pawn her brooch. The testimony of Mrs. Jones throughout tended to show the poverty of the Bowron family and to negative the claim that Mrs. Newton brought $900 with her to the United States or that she had any such sum as $25,000 in her brother's keeping. Mrs. Jones was closely cross-examined, but she adhered to her direct testimony. Among other things brought out was the fact that she had so destitute was she, and had once given her a pair of second-hand shoes.

WITH OUTSTRETCHED FACE AND HALF OPENED LIPS,

A single red hair, found in the blood spots on a handkerchief found on Newton, was testified to by Dr. King Wylly. In October last a piece of one of the handkerchiefs was taken and examined by Dr. Wylly. He reported that he had not found any blood; but Dr. Wylly testified that on that occasion he found a single blood crystal. Supposing that he might have scratched his finger, and caused the crystal to get on the handkerchief, he would not accept it as evidence that there was blood there. His last examination revealed the blood corpuscles, capillaries, etc., very distinctly, and under the microscope he discovered a single red hair—coarse red hair. McMillan had red hair.

The case having been given to the jury, the result was awaited with breathless interest. The court-room was filled with ladies. The jury soon returned, and, in answer to the question, the foreman answered: "We, the jury, find the prisoner guilty as charged in the indictment."

All the while Newton had been nervously twitching his moustache. When the verdict was read out he dropped his head and turned deathly pale, while a slight tremor passed through his frame. He then suddenly jumped up and seized his hat, forgetting that the court had not adjourned, but presently controlled himself and resumed his seat. His wife remained quiet for a few moments, when a few tears trickled down her cheeks and she grasped her husband's arm convulsively, but beyond this she showed no emotion. Judge Cooke pronounced the verdict of death. The counsel for the prisoner thereupon moved an appeal to the supreme court, before which tribunal the case will be argued in January. As Newton is a member of a wealthy English family, the case will be fought bitterly.

Music and the Drama.

Gounod, now sixty-five years old, expresses the opinion that music finds its noblest forms in religious ideas and sentiments. "You will see a religious thread running through all my operas and works of importance. For instance, the cathedral scene in Faust and Polyeucte, which is an absolutely religious opera. It is because of this feeling that I have given up writing for the theatre."

Mr. W. J. Ferguson, who played Pittacus Green with the original "Hazel Kirke" company, has just made a hit as the dude, Sir Chauncey Trip, in a comedy drama entitled "A Friendly Tip," and, having paid $2,000 for his release from the Madison Square theatre, it his intention to star in it next season.

One of Oscar Wilde's designs for Marie Prescott's Vera wardrobe is a vermilon china silk. It is a novelty in that it is cut, like the old Biblical garments, out of one piece of stuff without seams.

The Countess of Folkestone's orchestra consists of twenty-one women, among whom are two viscountesses, four countesses, and a marchioness. She herself leads with the baton.

Miss Hope Glenn, the contralto of the Nilsson Opera Company, has earned golden opinions in London, and is engaged for the Worcester festival in September.

Emily Rigl, Harry Lacy, E. A. Locke, &c., form Harry Lacy's "Planter's Wife" combination, and expect to play that drama all of the next season.

Miss Lizzie Harold and Manager W. J. Comley propose to bring out a new play called "The Princess Chuck" during the coming season.

Robert Buchanan intends to come to America next winter to supervise the performance of a play made out of his "God and Man."

Miss Kellogg will shortly return from Europe, and will commence a series of farewell performances in September.

M. B. Curtis will play "Shylock" in London, if Henry Irving will consent to play "Sam'l of Posen" over here.

Sir Arthur Sullivan is preparing a score for Gilbert's libretto, which is a parody on Tennyson's "Princess."

Mme. Sofia Scalchi made a great hit in the revival of Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete" in London recently.

The Vokes — Fred., Fawdon, Victoria and Jessie—come together again this season.

William Castle will join the Abbott opera company in September.

Explaining.

A strapping son of Ireland, from Geddes, called on a leading surgeon of Syracuse, N. Y., the day after the Fourth of July. He had a big lump on the side of his jaw, which he requested the surgeon to examine. When asked what had happened to him he said:

"Oi was out fur a bit av recreation on the Foarth of July, an' Oi got hit wid a shoe in the jaw."

"Get hit with a shoe!' exclaimed the doctor in amazement, as he examined the jaw and found that it was fractured.

"Yis, decthor. Oi got hit wid a shoe. But do ye moind, there was a fut inside uv it."

Cancelling Postage Stamps by Electricity.

Mr. J. Chatenet has invented a new cancelling instrument for the obliteration of postage and other stamps. The instrument is similar in shape to one of the ordinary stampers, but is connected by insulated wires to a battery, the circuit of which is completed in the act of stamping. A zig-zag platinum wire running across the face of the stamp is by this means rendered instantly red-hot, and so burns the postage stamp in an indelible manner without injuring the envelope.

A ruffian was lately treated to a taste of the lash at Montreal. Were the cat-o'-nine tails used more frequently, outrages on women and children would not be of such almost daily occurrence as they are.

PERU AND CHILI.

Caceres Makes His Escape.—The Military Situation Changing.—The Question of Peace.

A New York Herald correspondent writes from Lima under a recent date: There has been hurry and rapid marching on the part of the Chilian forces during the past week. The Peruvian general, Caceres, away up in the heart of the Andes, but not the flowery neighborhood suggested by Mr. Church's picture, cleverly doubled on his pursuers around another range of the South American backbone, and at this moment must be within striking distance of Cero de Pasco, three days' march from Lima, and quite uncomfortably near the scattered outposts of the Chilians. When the Chilian assailants moved forward to hem in their prize Caceres was most unexpectedly over the hills and far away, speeding back to the very region from which he had so recently been dislodged. So it is that the military situation has undergone a material change, although no fighting of moment has occurred. Caceres has escaped from the dangerous vicinity of his most powerful pursuers, and by this time may even have gained some further advantages over the weak detachments left to guard the districts from whence he has been driven. We should have stirring news from the interior before many days are over.

Meanwhile the Chilians are still extending a protecting hand to Gen. Iglesias, and endeavoring to second his feeble efforts toward establishing his dominion in the north. The Peruvian flag already waves over the city of Trujilio. Thanks to the generosity of the Chilians, and much to the disgust of the citizens of that town, the national banner was restored to its former place of dignity, saluted by the music of a Chilian military band. The Chilians have handed over to their protege the ports of Salaverry, Pacasmayo, and Malabrigo. Their main body of troops under Col. Gorostiaga was, as we have seen, stationed in Caceres' path in the interior, to prevent his advance towards Cajamarca; but they still have considerable forces at Lambayeque and Chiclayo, and hold the ports of Eten and Payta, while they continue exporting guano from the famous Lobos islands. We have not yet had sufficient time to judge of the effect produced in Chili by the recent action of the Arequipa congress authorizing President Calderon to treat directly with the government of Santiago for peace on the basis of the cession of Tarapaca. Regarding this matter and the advantage to be derived both by Chili and Peru from a peace celebrated with a constituted Peruvian authority, instead of putting a Chilian puppet in power, the Herald has been fully advised.

Our last cable advices from Santiago announce that a violent interpellation of the cabinet in the conduct of the war and the delay in securing peace had been set on foot in the Chilian senate, and the subject was deemed of such importance that the sessions were being held with closed doors. Further news from Europe confirms the intelligence already received to the effect that the proposed arrangement between Chili and Gen. Iglesias meets with general protest at the hands of the creditors of Peru, who seem to have some justice on their side when they insist that the mortgage they hold on the guano deposits of Tarapaca must be respected by Chili if she refuses to make peace without the annexation of that province and its vast natural wealth. In this condition of doubt as to whether Chili will persist in her intention of forcing Iglesias on Peru, as her own instrument, or will revoke that determination and treat for peace with the legitimate Peruvian representative, Garcia Calderon, it is not strange that there are rumors afloat of a proposed amalgamation of the two parties. It is stated here, and believed, that Don Aurelio Denegri, one of the most prominent citizens of Lima, and minister of finance during the short administration of Calderon, is engaged in the attempt to harmonize the action of the opposing factions. This might be of easy accomplishment at the sacrifice of some personal ambition. Iglesias has always declared that his object is peace, and Calderon has frequently made the same patriotic assertion. Therefore it is now desired that these gentlemen should jointly sign a preliminary treaty with Chili, calling for the immediate meeting of a constituent congress to ratify the compact and authorize the general elections to be held for the presidential dignity.

Little Worries.

It is pretty generally conceded that the petty worries of life do more to ruffle one's nerves and to employ the recording angel than larger calamities. When a man receives a "facer" in business or in his domestic circle, he just looks at it squarely until he realizes it, and concludes either to remedy or bear it, and there is an end of the matter. But not so with the maddening trifles which, mosquito-like, return again and again to the attack as though bent upon driving one to drivelling idiocy. It is our policy to "point a moral or adorn a tale" upon the handiest text, and the proximate cause of the above moralizing is a rooster. In our youthful days we read that this bird only sang (!) at day-break; but there are a good half-dozen in the immediate vicinity of almost anybody's "roosting-place" who, without regard to time or place, express their opinion on current topics with stertorian voices which would put a stump-orator to the blush. What we have done to deserve this awful punishment we have not the faintest idea. In the meantime he takes leave humbly to suggest that no man has a right to keep birds or animals, bi or quadruped, which are a nuisance to his neighbors. With these unearthly sounds dinned in our ears from "eve till dewy morn," no wonder that we have so oft of late dreamt we were St. Peter. Writing of this antiquated nuisances Dryden says:

"Beast of a bird, supinely when he might
Lie snug and sleep, to rise before the light!
What if his dull forefathers used that cry?
Could he not let a bad example die?

The Comparative Merits of Beer and Water.

A retired Oxfordshire farmer has accepted the challenge of a Wiltshire agriculturist to test the comparative merits of water and beer, and has increased the proposed wager from £5 to £25. The farmer claims the privilege of putting a little oatmeal in his drink, and has accepted the defiance as an agent of the Church of England Temperance Society. The proposal is that both men shall work in the harvest field.

The keen competition of trade results sometimes to the advantage of the consumer, and, again, it has just the opposite effect, that is where the quality of the material is sacrificed to the cheapness of price. In no line is this more true than in the jewellery business, where unscrupulous manufacturers and dealers stamp from two to five karats finer than they are, making it nearly impossible for those wishing to sell goods for just what they are to do business, unless they have an EXTENSIVE CONNECTION, and UNTARNISHED REPUTATION. This is just our position, and with our new premises, and large staff, we can now defy competition, quality being considered. We now manufacture Gold Chains and Necklets of every description, including the latest English and American Designs. Diamond Rings, Brooches, Ear-Rings, Colored and Bright Lockets, Seals and Charms, Colored and Bright Suites and half Suites and Bracelets, Chased, Carved, Engraved and Gem Rings, and 18 karat Standard Wedding Rings, and we would specially draw the attention of Exhibition Committees and School Boards to our new designs of Gold and Silver Medals and badges. The Jewellery Repairing Department is kept quite distinct from the manufacturing of new goods, and has a separate staff of workmen, who give their whole attention to the continually increasing amount of damaged and broken jewellery that every mail brings us. If you want new jewellery of guaranteed quality write us, giving description of article required, and we will quote you price by return mail, and if you have some articles that you wish properly and promptly repaired, send them in by registered parcel post, and we will return them at once. A LONG JOURNEY.

Two Babies Make a Trip of Nearly Four Thousand Miles All Alone.

There arrived in the city yesterday morning two very young voyagers from the old world, perhaps not the youngest that ever came over, but certainly the youngest that ever crossed the ocean in the manner in which they did. About eighteen months ago, a gentleman and his wife left Yorkshire, England, and came to this country. Not knowing where they would locate permanently, they left behind two children, both girls, one 2½ years old and the other 4. They were left in charge of the gentleman's mother, who took the best of care of them, and the two little orphans, as it were, enjoyed excellent health and prospered finely. The father and mother came to this city some time ago and concluded to make their home here a permanent one, and naturally enough they wanted their little darlings with them. The father, some time ago, called upon Col. Will. S. Hays, agent of the Inman line of Steamships, and asked him "if he could bring them over." The colonel told him they were rather small to come so far alone, but that he thought it could be done. So on the 19th day of June Col. Hays issued the ticket to bring them from Liverpool, England, to Louisville, Ky., with instructions to the agents and officers of the Inman line to watch over and provide for their comfort and safety.

The two little girls accordingly left Yorkshire, England, eighty miles beyond Liverpool, and forty miles beyond Manchester, and arrived at Liverpool about ten days ago bearing letters from Col. Hays, and each one marked with a tag bearing his address in this city. The Liverpool agents took charge of them, put them on board the City of Richmond, and after a safe and pleasant voyage across the Atlantic arrived in New York on Saturday last, where they were met by the Inman line agents. They were supplied in New York with first-class through tickets to Louisville and put in charge of the sleeping-car conductor, who brought them through safely, arriving, via the Short-line railroad, yesterday morning. They were delivered to Col. Hays at his office, both wearing the tags which they left home in England with and bearing the address in full. The gallant colonel met them with a welcome kiss and notified the parents by telephone of the safe arrival of the little ones, and, after giving them a hearty breakfast, took them back to his office to await the arrival of the father, who shortly after came, and there was a meeting of happiness and joy.

Those little girls had left England alone, crossed the Atlantic, and made a safe and pleasant journey of nearly four thousand miles. They did not experience any sickness on the entire trip, and seemed cheerful and happy on their arrival here. They were bright and beautiful children, smart as they could be, and their presence created a sensation on Main street.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Gentlemanly Brigands.

Mr. Alexander Corpi, who reached the capital this morning after twelve days detention among the brigands in the neighborhood of Ismidt, gives the following narrative of his misadventure: "On the afternoon of Thursday, I was giving orders for some alterations outside the building occupied by my silk factory, when suddenly I was surrounded and seized by nine individuals of suspicious appearance. I asked what object they might have in securing my person, whereupon they stated that they wanted money. I remarked that I had none on me, but if released I would give a promissory note for a reasonable amount. That the brigands, for such they were, declined, and finally they hurried me off on foot to a spot eight hours' distant, where a halt was ordered by the chief of the party. The brigands then formed a council to decide upon the most suitable place to take me for the purpose of communicating with my family, in the near vicinity. Ismidt was selected, as offering every facility in this respect. On Sunday, we reached the spot agreed upon, which is situated in a mountainous district some two hours from the town of Ismidt. Negotiations then commenced for the purpose of fixing the amount of ransom. The first figure named was £50,000, but finally, after several days' bargaining, they consented to take £1,000. Means were then found to dispatch a messenger to my family with the news of my whereabouts and a request that they would forward the last-named sum in order to effect my release. According to agreement, I had explained in my letter that the amount of the ransom was to be accompanied by not more than three men. These formalities being complied with, two trusted servants of my family in charge of the money at length reached the scene of my captivity. The gold pieces were counted, and I was declared a free man. The captain of the band returned me the cash I had with me at the time I was captured, and handed my servants four liars for their trouble in bringing the ransom. Indeed, from first to last, I had no reason to complain of my treatment. A man servant and a woman cook were told off for attendance on me, I had many chats with the brigands, who were all Greeks. They showed considerable forethought for the welfare of the rural population by expressing the hope that my misadventure would not lead me to give up working the silk factory, as such a decision on my part would entail misery upon a number of villagers who depended upon their employment therefor their daily bread. 'You need have no fear in future,' they added; 'we will guarantee your safety.' Before separating from the band we became such excellent friends that the chief hinted he had an important capture in view, and that, if successful, he would return the whole of my ransom." Immediately that Mr. Corpi was out of the hands of the brigands the Turkish troops were sent off in pursuit and every effort is being made to capture the band.—Constantinople Dispatch to London Standard.

THE RIVER OF DEATH.

Joaquin Miller's Interesting and Graphic Description of the Saguenay.

I had long heard, as many of you have no doubt, of a dark and mysterious river away to the northeast of Quebec, called by many the "river of death." And I resolved to visit it, since it is very easy of access, and the two hundred miles of travel one round of rest and pleasure on board of spacious steamers. . . . A dozen or so of us were Americans, mainly from the eastern States, induced here by Mr. Howells' description of the weird "Styx;" as he names the dark and silent Saguenay in his brilliant "Chance Acquaintance." Here we met a dozen or so Englishmen from across the sea; some journalists from almost anywhere like myself, and then forty or fifty native English-Canadians. We notice French-Canadians travel but little, save in the way of making pilgrimages to the little shrines and churches that here and there bless the shore of this beloved river.

Fifty miles further on is Murray bay, the Newport of Canada. A pretty place, peaceful, restful, the air full of ozone, and the name of malaria unknown to the inhabitants. I find I can get a furnished cottage here for one hundred dollars for the season, while it would cost me fully one thousand at Long Branch, or Newport; living proportionate; cabs fifty cents and one dollar a day. The society, good, moral, and honest. And at least, I think, cultivated, if not wealthy. The diversions are fishing and shooting and hunting. The Americans are quietly getting a foot-hold here, as well as at some of the similar, but less important points.

. . . . . .

This river of death, or Saguenay is bottomless. You might, if possible, drain the St. Lawrence river dry, says Mr. LeeMoine, the Canadian authority, and yet this dark, still river would be able to float the Great Eastern and all her Majesty's ships of the maine. "A bottomless river," sounds strangely new, indeed were it not so, I should not trouble you or myself to mention it. But this river is thus far unfathomed. It is full of counter-currents, swift, perilous in the extreme.

. . . . . .

Then as we rounded another weary and eternal cape of overhanging granite, in its few frightened and torn trees, the dark way would open before us. And then ten, twenty, thirty miles more of silent, gloom, river of death, No sound. No sign of life is here. Summer or winter., springtime or autumn, all seasons alike, no bird, no beast, not even the smallest insect, save only a possible housefly that may harbor in the steamboat and so be brought with you, is ever seen here. This is literally the river of death. I know no spot like it on the face of this earth. Our deserts with their owls, horn-toads, prairie dogs and rattlesnakes, are populous in comparison. And yet this awful absence of all kinds of life cannot be dua to the waters. They are famous for fish of the best kind. The air is certainly delicious. But all this vast river's shore is as empty of life as when "darkness was upon the face of the earth."

. . . . . .

And no man has settled here. For nearly one hundred miles not a sign of man is seen. You seem to be a sort of Columbus, as if no man had ever been here before you. At every turn of a great granite cape these lines rhymed incessantly in my ears:

> We were the first that ever burst
> Upon that silent sea.

An hour past midnight and we neared the central object of the journey, Cape Trinity, a granite wall of about two thousand feet, which in places literally overhangs the ship. Our captain laid the vessel closely against the monolyth, and for a moment rested there. We seemed so small. The great steamer was as a little top, held out there in the hollow of God's hand.

. . . . . .

Here, turning about we saw the glorious sun burst suddenly and in full splendor over this amber river, which now in the full light looked as tawny as the desert tiger.—Quebec Chronicle.

INTERESTING DISCOVERY.

Noah's Ark Found Sticking out of a Glacier on Mount Ararat.

A Constantinople contemporary is responsible for a cheering item of news from the east, which at the present moment will do much to divert people's minds from dwelling on the subject of cholera, the Suez Canal, and other pleasant subjects of that sort. This is no more or less than the discovery of Noah's Ark. It appears that some Turkish Commissioners appointed to investigate the question of avalanches on Mount Ararat suddenly came upon a gigantic structure of very dark wood protruding from a glacier. They made inquiries of the inhabitants (Q. 1,725 in their report.) These had seen it for six years, but had been afraid to approach it because a spirit of fierce aspect had been seen looking out of the upper window. Turkish Commiasioners, however, are bold men, not deterred by such trifles, and they determined to reach it. Situated as it was among the fastnesses of one of the glens of Mount Ararat, it was a work of enormous difficulty, and it was only after incredible hardships that they succeeded. The ark, one will be glad to hear, was in a good state of preservation, although the angles—observe not the bow or stern—had been a good deal broken in its descent. They recognized it at once. There was an Englishman among them who had presumably read the Bible, and he saw it was made of the ancient wood of Scripture, which, as every one knows, only grows on the plains of the Enphrates. Effecting an entrance into the structure, which was painted brown, they found that the Admiralty requirements for the conveying of horses had been carried out, and the interior was divided with partitions fifteen feet high. Into three of these only could they get, the ark being full of ice, and how far the ark extended into the glacier they could not tell. If, however, on being uncovered it turns out to be 300 cubits long it will go hard with diabelievers in the book of Genesis. Needless to say an American was soon on the spot, and negotiations have been entered into with the local pasha for its speedy transfer to the United States.

A TORONTO TRAGEDY.

Shot Through the Heart at His own Doorstep.

Plucky Arrest of the Assassin—Almost a Double Murder—A Policeman's Close Call.

Just as the sombre stillness of midnight was settling down over Toronto, and none but a few belated pedestrians could be seen on the almost deserted streets, the sharp report of a revolver, followed by two others in quick succession, told that a tragedy was being enacted. York street, so long notorious, was the scene of what was apparently a cold-blooded murder, and the victim, a sober, industrious young man, who found a sudden termination to his day's labor in the bullet of an assassin. James Maroney, a young unmarried man of twenty-four years of age, was the support of his mother, a widow residing at 59 Pearl (formerly Bolton) street, with a younger son and two daughters. For some time employed as driver for the Rossin House 'bus, he latterly transferred his services to Mr. George Trimble, who describes him as one of the best, most attentive, and industrious of his employes. Tuesday night he was down to meet the Grand Trunk train, and having stabled his horses for the night, proceeded on his way to the home he was fated never to reach alive. Arriving at King street, he crossed over, and while passing up the west side of York street, he met a friend named Jordan, and walked along with him as far as the north-west corner of Pearl and York streets, when he met a man named Charles Andrews, who was also accompanied by a friend. The quartette stopped on the above corner and engaged in conversation. An altercation sprang up between Maroney and Andrews, and a struggle ensued. They wrestled in deadly earnestness for a moment, when Andrews fell, with Maroney on top of him. Maroney was heard to exclaim, "Oh, you've got a revolver—," but the rest of his words were stopped by of a revolver, and Maroney ceased to struggle. They both arose together, and Maroney ran south across the road to Montgomery's saloon, saying, as he ran, "I'm killed." Just as he uttered this sentence he fell, and never uttered another word, nor moved. Police Constable Cuddy, who was in the vicinity, on hearing the report at once ran towards the spot, and on reaching the corner saw Andrews running at full speed along Pearl street. The two or three horrified spectators of the act were only able to exclaim:—"Catch that man; he's shot Maroney!" Cuddy instantly gave chase, but in the meantime Andrews was headed off before running a hundred yards by two men who were on the sidewalk, and compelled to turn off into a short lane on the south side of the street, and about forty yards west of York street. He had just got about twenty feet into the lane when Cuddy turned the corner in full chase. Quick as lightning he wheeled round, and presenting his revolver, fired point blank at the policeman, but without effect, the ball passing under the arm-pit and grazing the sleeve of his coat. Before he could fire another shot the plucky officer closed on him, and catching him by the right wrist and neck dashed his head against a wall. The villain, however, with a quick motion, had cocked his weapon for a second shot and fired again, but luckily the ball passed between Cuddy's legs and was buried in the ground. The revolver was quickly wrenched from his hand, and with the asistance of Constable Bell, who just then arrived, Cuddy brought him to police headquarters. As soon as it became known that a murder had taken place, a large crowd immediately began to assemble from all parts, and collected around the postrate form of Maroney, who lay on the sidewalk on the south-west corner of Bolton and York streets. No sign of life nor motion was perceived, and, though nobody went near enough to feel the body, the almost universal opinion was that the man was dead. A cry for a doctor went up, and immediately a man boarded a hack, and drove to Dr. Thorburn's house. The latter, accompanied by Dr. Cooke, arrived shortly on the scene, but on taking a short look at the form and the body was conveyed to his mother's house, 59 Pearl street. Here the physicians had the body stripped, and a more careful examination of the wound was made. It was found that the bullet had entered the left breast just a little above the nipple, and immediately opposite the heart, and had gone clear through the body, wounding the apex of the heart, and coming out near the spine. Death, in the opinion of the physicians, must have ensued immediately on his falling. The wound bled but little, the bleeding being almost all internal. The dead man wore a peaceful expression on his face as he lay on the sofa in his mother's house, as though the death was painless if it was sudden. At his family's house a took place when the shooting was announced. They were momentarily expecting Maroney's appearance, and when apprized of the shooting evinced some alarm, but could not realize at once the tragedy that had taken place. When, however, the stiffening form of the bread-winnner was brought in, and the terrified family saw too plainly the features of Maroney fixed, and the ghastly pallor of death settled on his face, they were overcome, and the scene which followed was piteous to witness. The mother threw herself beside the lifeless body, and speaking to it hysterically endeavored vainly to obtain some answer to her appeals for him to speak. When she was finally convinced that he was dead, she sat down beside the body, and rocked herself to and fro, almost crazy from the terrible event. His sisters were almost demented from the sudden bereavement, and could not be consoled. The door was besieged by curious neighbors, who flocked around to express sympathy, and converse with each other about what they knew of the shooting.

PRONOUNCED LIFE EXTINCT.

MOST HEARTRENDING SCENE

THE PRISONER

is seemingly about thirty years of age, about 5 feet 8 inches in height, of dark complexion with heavy black moustache. He was dressed in a gray suit of tweed and looked like a well-to-do mechanic. He spoke with a strong English accent and said he was a stranger in the country. His actions were indicative of an attack of delirium tremens, and while in the station he would now and then glance around in a frightened sort of way as if he was afraid of something jumping at him. He spoke in an excited manner, and a peculiar twinge of his right eye gave him an appalling appearance. He said he had been living in the American Hotel, but no such name could be found on the books, and the proprietor and employes knew of no such guest at the house. When put in the cell he calmed down greatly, and lay down on one of the benches, and after muttering to himself for a time sank into a sleep broken by frequent tossings.

THE WEAPON.

The revolver with which the deed was committed is a 38-calibre Smith & Wesson, of splendid workmanship. It had been pulled to half-cock in the scuffle, and has five chambers, all of which contained cartridges. Three of them had exploded, and the other two were loaded. The cartridges were of rim fire pattern, and held conical bullets of great weight. The barrel of the weapon was a very long one, and in the hands of an experienced man the weapon would be a dreadful one. It was quite new, and the two chambers which held the unexploded cartridges did not bear any signs as if they had done any work. The handle was highly chased and the steel mountings were as bright as if they had just left the maker's hand.

CONSTABLE CUDDY.

Alfred Cuddy, No. 58, the plucky policeman who boldly faced the shots of the murderer and secured his arrest, is a young man, being slightly over twenty-four years of age, about 5 feet 10 inches in height, and not by any means stoutly built. He is an Irishman by birth, and graduated from the Royal Irish Constabulary. He came out to America three years ago and joined the police force in this city a year ago last April. It is said that he had some difficulty in entering the force on account of his youthful appearance. Both he and his brother, Constable John Cuddy, have before this earned for themselves a reputation for courageous conduct in the path of duty. He was not in the least excited over his miraculous escape, or elated over the bold arrest he made. He and Constable Bell, who brought the prisoner to the station, lugged him in as though they were but handling a common drunk.

AT THE HOUSE.

The arival of the corpse of one who had been its main support was the signal of a touching outburst of grief. Symathising neighbors crowded in on the half-awakened family, and gathered around the board where covered by a sheet, lay all that remained of the murdered man. The face was calm and placid, showing no signs of the terrible ordeal, but pointing to a sudden and almost painless death. Just over the left breast a small round hole showed where the fatal bullet had found its way to the heart, and scarcely a trace of blood could be seen on the body. Sitting at the feet of the corpse was a sister of the deceased, who, with her mother, could scarcely realize the dreadful truth. A white haired grand dame endeavored to console another daughter, while the sobs of a ten-year-old boy told that he was just beginning to understand the extent of his loss. Altogether the scene was a touching one, and in itself would be a heavy punishment if witnessed by the author of the grief.

The appearance and bearing of the prisoner indicate that he is an old hand at rough work. His face is anything but English and wears a hard set look peculiar to the "tough." Detective Newhall has long had in his possession an accurate description and likeness of a notorious cracksman known in detective circles all over the continent as Charlie Morgan who recently figured in a deadly row at Detroit. When he saw the prisoner he at once recognized in his appearance a remarkable similarity to Morgan. Additional investigation bore out his indentity to such a degree that the detectives have now little doubt that "Andrews" is no less a personge than the notorious Morgan. Only last summer he was shot in the leg in a bar-room brawl in one of the lowest dens of Detroit, from the effects of which he is still slightly lame. A peculiar shade over his right eye was caused by a blow received in a scrimmage for liberty a few years ago. The city detectives suppose that he has been one of the principal directors in the operations of the gang of burglars who have been infesting the city of late.

The "Thousand" Islands.

Why they are called the Thousand Islands is not known, for there are about 1,800 of them on the average, the number being determined by the height of the water. "In an extra good season," says a correspondent of the New York Times, "there are over 2,000. The island season is good when the water is low. When it is high the season is poor. This year the water is very high, and I do not think there are over 1,700 islands, the 100 being under water. A fall of three feet would more than double the number of islands. None of them rise to a great height above the surface of the river. There is one that runs up to a height, perhaps, 150 feet, but the average of them all would not be more than six feet above the water level. They vary in size from that of a piece of chalk to eight or nine miles long and two miles across. Some of them are no bigger than a Quebec mosquito, which measures two inches from tip to tip of wing, and a rise of an inch in the water would cover them up. A great many are egg-shaped, about 100 feet long, and nearly all, of any size, are covered with Christmas trees.

Shakespearian Notes.

Shylock is a fair exemplification of how pound foolish a man may be.

"Season your admiration for a while" is rather a spicy way of putting it.

When Hamlet said "But I have that within, which passeth show" it is believed that he had in his pocket a complimentary ticket to the circus.

Hamlet was probably on a fishing excursion when he said "The air bites shrewdly,' and the inference is that he was successful in "catching cold."

"Forever and forever farewell, Cassius. If we do meet again, why we shall smile," said Brutus, and how pleasant it is to contemplate that "age does not wither nor custom stale" this delightful habit of "smiling" when friends meet.—Philip H. Welch in Life.

The leading feature of the American Agriculturist for September is its carefully prepared list of the State, County, and other Fairs, which fills eight solid columns, and will be found to be a most useful guide to the various exhibitions. Among the full page Illustrations are a pleasing picture, by Cary, of Children in a Cotton Field, and farm life among the Indians in North Carolina, Flock-masters will be interested in the engravings which show the improvement made in the Merino sheep since the last century, in diminishing the size of the horns and increasing the quantity and fineness of the fleece. However valuable the lustrous fibre of the Alpaca may be, one would not after reading the illustrated account of Alpaca Farming, care to engage in its production. In marked contrast with the rude and desolated home of the Alpaca Farmer of South America, are the beautiful scenes which illustrate the Editorial Notes of a trip beyond the Missouri among the fertile farms of Nebraska and Wyoming. Full details are given of a prize barn, with estimates of the cost of material and labor. The many conveniences it affords for a moderate outlay, must adapt it to the wants of many farmers in all parts of the country. A characteristic feature of the American Agriculturist, has always been the many farm conveniences and labor-saving appliances give in its columns, especially those which can be made on the farm. The present number has its share of these, including an improved milking stool, brush rake, lattled Box, cart for ensilage. Various needs of the orchard and garden are provided for. The household department is attractive, and the children are provided with interesting and instructive reading. There are over 70 original engravings in the September American Agriculturist. The following are the leading writers in this issue of the paper : George Thurber, A. B. Allen, Wm. Clift, F. D. Curtis, Joseph Harris, Orange Judd, David W. Judd, Alfred Trumble, P. H. Jacobs, H. A. Haigh, John Morrison, jr., F. Grundy, M. C. Weld, W. W. Meech, L. D. Snook, W E. Stone, J. M. Stahl.

VANCOUVER'S ISLAND.

The Delightful Climate which Entranced the Princess Louise.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat writes: Crossing over the Straits of Juan de Fuca to the pretty city of Victoria, we stood on British soil and enjoyed the far famed climate of Vancouver's Island. Seen from the sea the whole place presents a different character from the raw towns along Puget Sound, where shingles and shavings, paint and mortar-beds surround nearly every finished structure to tell of its newness. The solid red brick warehouse fronting along the harbor and the unmistakable signs of English solidity and stability on every hand carried convincing proof of the Briton's rule, without the Union Jack flying from all the official flagstaffs and buildings. There is a little bother with the custom-house inspections if you wish to land any baggage at Victoria, but as duty falls alike on articles imported from England or the United States, the stranger can not grumble more than the colonists themselves.

Whenever you hear anyone descant upon Victoria, the drives come in for chief mention after the climate, and in these two respects Victoria is entitled to precedence over any small spot on the continent. English rule had nothing to do with the climate which is mild and equable the year round, with an average temperature of 42 degrees for the month of January and 64 for the month of August, and every citizen relates with royal pride that the Princess Louise came here to spend two days and became so delighted that she remained two months and then left with regret that she could not stay longer. English rule is demonstrated, however, in the excellent roads that extend in every direction from the city, and the summer visitors, who come here from different parts of the Pacific coast, never find their longest stay half long enough to include all the attractive points within easy drive from Victoria. Convict labor has been employed in making the macadamized highways, and convicts are constantly at work now keeping them in perfect condition. A favorite drive is that leading from Victoria to the naval station on Esquimault Bay, which is known commonly as 'Squimo. The 'Squimo road follows part way beside a narrow and curving arm of the sea, through which the tide rushes like the swift current of a river, and half the way it unrolls its length between hedges of fern and undergrowth and walls of solid forest trees. Picturesque rocks, tangles of wild rose and sweet brier, and forest nooks dappled with sunshine here and there, make one continual picture along the road, and the occasional red jackets of the English marines and soldiers illuminate the landscape with brilliant touches of color. At 'Squimo the flagship Swift-Sure, under command of Admiral Lyon, lay at anchor, with its port holes open, and a general war-like and business air pertained to the huge man-of-war and the lesser ships and corvettes at the station. On the Swift-Sure alone there are 600 men, and looking at the great vessel, even the most patriotic American must blush for our own little navy and join in the chorus of "Britannia Rules the Sea."

All Victoria breathes the atmosphere of a past and greater grandeur, and the citizens feelingly revert to the time when British Columbia was a separate colony in itself, and Victoria the seat of the miniature court of the Governor-General and commander-in-chief of its forces. Those were the good old days to which no latter-day progress can approach, and it is with no heartfelt joy that the people celebrate "Dominion Day," when British Columbia and the two Provinces of Canada were made one. The recent visit of the Marquis of Lorne and all the flattering things he found time to say have gone far towards restoring the political complacency of these people, and it requires no insistance to make them believe that you consider Victoria the most charming spot in the country. English traits and English customs are maintained as well here as in the home island, and a charming friendliness exists between this colony and the United States. "Dominion Day" falls on July 1, and the celebration of it hardly exceeds the spirit with which the glorious Fourth of their American cousins across the line is observed, and the first week of July is the gala season at Victoria. With only twenty-three miles of salt water separating them from American shores there is one material difference that no one fails to observe. In Victoria everyone takes life easily, and things move in a slow and accustomed groove, as if sanctioned by the customs of centuries on this same spot. The stores close every afternoon at 6 o'clock, although at this season daylight lasts for three and four hour later, and business men go home to their comfortable roast beef and pudding as if the fever and activity of American trade and competition were far away and unheard of. Every separate article that you wish to buy is kept in a different kind of store than in America, and between the chemist, the stationer, the haberdasheries and the green groceries many of the perplexities of London shopping assail you in Victoria. The climax comes, however, when the young man at the postoffice window turns on you a look of surprise and bids you go to the bookstore to buy postage stamps, forsooth!

A Household Word.

Nothing distinctly metropolitan has taken so firm a hold of the affections of the travelling public, nor become so thoroughly a household word, as has the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot, New York City. At present, thousands upon thousands are daily recommending their friends to accord their patronage to the Grand Union, regarding it as they do as next to their own home. Its more than 600 rooms, at $1 and upwards per day, are the cheapest to be obtained in any strictly first-class hotel in New York; while its restaurant, cafe, lunch and wine rooms are without rival. In stopping at this hotel the traveller not only saves the expense of baggage transfer, but carriage hire, while the accommodations secured are strictly first-class and at moderate prices.

Our friends on the other side are beginning to talk about their possible candidates for the next Presidential election. There is no one on either side with very pronounced claims. But this is all the better, for in general it is a race of nobodies and the darker the horse the greater the likelihood of his ultimate triumph.

Women's Fun.

After suffering "the bigamies of death" from an attack of "inflammation in the borax," Mrs. Partington threw herself back in her easy chair and remarked: there's no blessing like health, particularly when you are sick."

A little girl's essay on a cow: "A cow is a big brown animal. It has four legs, one on each corner, and a tail behind. It is a very beautiful animal, the cow is. It gives us milk, butter, cheese and knife-handles. The cow is a woman animal."

Considering the public way in which ladies carry their purses, it is strange that thieves do not snatch them oftener. Perhaps, though, the thieves have found out that the purses are like human heads—the higher they are carried the less there is in them.

"Do you fear lightning, Miss Fitzroy?" inquired De Maurice tenderly, as he saw the gathering storm in the west. "Y-e-e-s, I am somewhat frightened. But the lightning never seems to strike us, although most of the girls of my very set are engaged.

When a man is escorting his wife to the depot, where she will bid him good-bye for a month or so in the country, he should be careful not to sing "tum-te-dum-tiddy" above his breath, or she may conclude to remain at home. This is given to you straight under the shoulder.

"Never say 'Mrs, So-and-So's young ones,' said a Philadelphia lady to her young hopeful; "rats have young ones, people have children." "That may be all right about Mrs. So-and-So," answered the boy; "I don't know her; but Mrs. Smith has young ones, for I heard her call one of them a 'little rat.'"

"How is it," asked Mrs. Fogg, "that you take so much interest in other women's faces and dresses, and none in anything that belongs to me?" "When you go to a strange city," replied Fogg, "you run about to see all the places of interest; but you never think of visiting the lions of your native town."

Supporting our Friends.

There is no limit but ability to the obligation upon parents to care for their children, or upon children to care for their parents, while such assistance is necessary. Brothers and sisters are under similar obligations as regards each other. But how about more remote relations—cousins and uncles and aunts—who are connected with us by consanguineity—stepfathers and stepmothers, brothers' widows and sisters' widowers, and the host of others with whom we have no kinship, and who yet seem to "belong" to us! Have they any special claim upon us? Are we under any greater obligation to interest ourselves in their affairs, to sympathize with them in their misfortunes and to extricate them from their difficulties, than we are as regards other people, not in any way connected with us, under similar circumstances? Has any improvident uncle a right to draw when he is "in a pinch" on the purse of his thrifty nephew! Or a scallawag of the Montague Tigg or Dick Swiveller stamp to reproach his cousin with heartlessness when the latter declines to be squeezed? Have all one's wife's relations a rightful claim on our means? Does the mere accident of blood relationship—to confine ourselves to that—entitle one to make requisitions at his convenience or pleasure, upon those so connected with him? We hardly think it. It does not very clearly appear that any one is bound to do more for relations, outside the family proper, than for chance acquaintances or strangers. If we are disposed to help them and have opportunity, well enough; but if we are able to help any one who is in need we are bound—equally bound—to do it. These remote relations come under the general obligation of benevolence, not under any special obligation arising out of their connection with us.

California not so Golden.

Prolific as are the vineyards and orchards of Southern California there are many drawbacks to the prosperity of farmers and fruit-growers in that region. The market is limited, and any surplus must be disposed of at ruinous rates. A shrewd and careful merchant of Chicago, John A. Tyrrell, after an extended tour through the state, makes some statements that sound strangely in comparison with the roseate experiences of other tourists. Mr. Tyrrell says: "The best fruit farms have bankrupted many of the owners and nearly bankrupted the remainder. The cause of this is the very high freights that have to be paid before the markets are reached. The owners of fruit farms are always on the watch for strangers—every man wanting to sell out. Cultivators of the vine, he says, look forward with gloomy forebodings to the future fearing that the phylloxera, which has appeared in Southtrn California, will work a destruction similar to that which it has effected in France. Besides this, Mr. Tyrrell adds, "the commerce of the coast is dying out. The population of San Francisco has not materially increased for seven years. When the mining is done the state is doomed." A deficiency of rain, with the consequent necessity for irrigation, renders the cultivation of the sandy soil unprofitable, and there is discontent and suffering among immigrants and colonies of settlers who are without substantial capital to rely upon in case of need. This is a sad and unsatisfactory reverse to the metallic splendor with whose glittering obverse the public has become familiar through years of bonanza mining and boasted prosperity.

Steel Nails.

At first the extra cost of steel nails was one and a half cents per pound, or $1.50 per keg, but it has now been reduced to $1. The great advantage of the steel nails is that they can be driven into hardwoed as easily as an iron nail will go into a pine board. Steel nails have been driven into a white oak knot without bending. Nothing else is now used in laying hardwood floors, as they require no boring, but are driven readily. For all kinds of finish they are especially adapted, and as so much hard finish is now employed, their use must be on the increase. They are also used largely by builders, and box makers are increasng their demand for them. Box makers have been using the better grade of iron nails, as they desire those that can be drawn and redriven.

LORD ELPHINSTONE ON THE NORTH-WEST.

Its Future Assured.

At the recent meeting of the shareholders of the Canada North-west Land Company in England, the chairman (Lord Elphinstone) said:

"I may perhaps be allowed to draw a parallel between the Canadian North-west and the neighboring state of Minnesota. Five or six years ago the northern part of Minnesota was less thickly populated than Manitoba is now, and again I turn to the railway returns as a proof of the prosperity of that country. The principal line of railway through the State, one in which I am myself interested, was a single line of rail running from St. Paul northwards towards the Canadian boundary. It has now a line along both banks of the Red River, and many branches and has not only been able to pay large dividends to its shareholders, but it has been able out of its surplus receipts to construct some hundreds of miles of branch lines during the last year or two. No, gentlemen, I ask you is it to be supposed that the prosperity which exists, and incontestably exists, in Minnesota, is to stop short at the boundary-line of posts between that State and the Province of Manitoba; and that the line of iron posts, that alone mark the division between the two countries, is to bar the road to progress? (Hear, hear.) It is impossible that it can do so; the prosperity that exists, the energy that is displayed on one side of the line, must extend, and is extending rapidly on the other. And now, gentlemen, I will not detain you longer, I have touched upon the past, the present and, as far as I have dared, I have ventured to lift the veil and look to the future of this great company in which we are all so much interested. I have shown you that the country is rapidly filling up; I have shown you that trade is increasing; I have shown you that railways, the great pioneers of trade and wealth, are in rapid progress throughout the country. The picture I have endeavored to draw is undoubtedly a bright one, and I intended it should be so; but I speak from no hearsay evidence, from no reports given me by visionary enthusiasts. I speak from my own personal knowledge of the country. (Hear, hear.) If any one has any doubt upon the matter let him do as I have done. I have been out there every year for the last four years, and I intend to go out again this year. I have watched the growth of the country, and I have seen with an almost bewildered astonishment the marvellous development that year by year takes place. None can form the slightest conception of what is going on. If any one doubts I say to him, "Go and do likewise," and I am satisfied he will return convinced of the truth of what I state, and he will return a wiser and a happier man. (Cheers.) Depend upon it that what he will see is but the bud, the germ, of the prosperity that he will see in the not distant future. A cloud, of course, may pass over the landscape; we may receive a check—no man can say, but depend upon it that if the cloud does pass over it will be but a passing shadow. It will pass away, and the landscape will be brighter than ever. But looking soberly, and judging by plain facts as they stand revealed before us, we have every reason to feel confidence in the success of the enterprise in which you have embarked your money. (Cheers.)

The Wheat Crop.

The August Report of the Bureau of Industries on the wheat crop is not, we regret to say, as satisfactory as could be desired, the crop, both as to quantity and quality being in a great degree inferior to last year's crop. Last year's crop, however, was an unusual—indeed an extraordinary—one, and no fair comparison can be made. Last year, according to the statistics collected by the Bureau, the area under wheat was 1,775,337 acres, the produce 40,921,201 bushels, and the average yield per acre 23 bushels. This year the area is 1,691,603 acres, the produce (as estimated by correspondents) 27,398,393 bushels, and the average yield per acre 16 bushels. For the two years the average would therefore be 197 bushels per acre. It is possible, however that the results of the threshing season may modify to some extent the figures for this year. The uneven character of the crop makes it difficult to estimate the yield of Fall Wheat, and Spring Wheat is liable to be affected by rust and the attacks of insects. The crop of Fall Wheat in the eastern portion of the province is not much below that of last year. In the western counties, where there is a great depth of alluvial soil, the rust has produced its worst effects, and the grain is considerably shrunken. Insect pests are not numerous, but the presence of the midge and the Hessian fly is noted in some localities. With the favourable harvest weather of the past three weeks the crop will no doubt be housed in good condition. The breadth of Spring Wheat is nearly the same as last year, although seeding operations were hindered by rainy weather. On all high or well-drained lands it made fine progress throughout July, and unless injured by rust or insects it promises a larger yield than last year's crop. The recent cool and bright weather has been very favourable to its maturity, but the midge, the weevil and the Hessian fly are reported in all the best Spring Wheat districts. The extent of the damage done by these pests, however, cannot be fully known until the grain is ripe.

It is scarcely worth while to dwell on the folly of violence and assassination as a means of promoting liberty and political enfranchisement, for it is scarcely within the range of possibility that there is one of our readers who has the slightest doubt on the subject, or would raise a finger in support of the wild schemes either of the Nihilists or the Invincibles. No man of any sense would hesitate about declaring that the murders in the Phœnix Park were huge blunders from the liberty point of view. They wrought beautifully into the hands of the coercionists and oppressors, and if it had been the intention of the plotters and executors of the infamy to discredit the Irish cause and to discourage the friends of freedom, a better or more effectual course could not have been pursued. Neither civil or religious liberty has ever advanced a single step by such means and the sooner all hot-headed unenlightened zealots take a note of this and regulate their conduct accordingly, the better for all concerned.

Female Recreations.

Says the New York Mail and Express: Several women followed the hounds in the first hunt of the Newport season yesterday, and horseback riding is rapidly increasing in favor as a feminine pastime. It is said that dancing was never so little in vogue at the summer resorts as during the present season, and fashionable women affect a preference for tennis and the tricycle, while even the dudes declare their devotion to manly sports. It is not difficult for persons who believe that whatever is fashionable in England is sure to become fashionable in the United States to understand this condition of things, for since Queen Victoria purchased a supply of tricycles for her grandchildren that vehicle has become a favorite with the young girls of England, and the popularity of lawn tennis among Englishwomen is well known. So excellent are the results of healthful outdoor recreations for women that it is desirable to have the present fashion made permanent. It is a common boast that American women are more beautiful than those of any other country, but it is to be feared that the foundation for the boast will soon disappear unless our women can be induced to take more exercise in the openair. The good health of Englishwomen is attributable to their practice of walking several miles with daily regularity, and it would be a national benefit if the custom were adopted by the women of the United States. Among the indications of a growing taste for out-door recreations for females in this country is the fact that more good feminine swimmers are to be seen at the ocean beaches than in previous seasons.

The eighth commandment was all very well at the time it was written, but it is altogether too narrow for thesedays. It should be withdrawn, to read something like this: "Thou shalt not steal; neither shalt thou embezzle, purloin, commit grand or petit larceny, or obtain money by false pretences; thou shalt not be guilty of breach of trust; thou shalt not indulge in shoplifting (unless you are respectable enough to prove that kleptomania is hereditary in the family); thou shalt not duplicate thy pay accounts."

THE UNFINISHED MANUSCRIPT.

The Story of Fate an Arkansas Man Told.

Some time ago the writer visited Prof. Gailnet, of Little Rock, Ark., and while sitting in the library, engaged in conversation with the entertaining gentleman, observed a roll of manuscript tied with a strip of black cloth. We asked him if it were something designed for publication.

"It will never be published," he said, and began to unroll it. "See how it ends," and glancing at the bottom of the last page we read the following: "While he sat alone, deeply musing, a hearse passed the house, and—" here the sentence broke off. Requesting, almost imploring, the Professor to tell us the history of the curious manuscript, he finally consented.

"I came to Arkansas when I was a young man. One night I sat in my library writing a story for a magazine. I was in good health and had cause to feel elated over the success I had just attained by the publication of a small volume of sketches, but still I felt the heavy weight of melancholy depression. I arose and walked out, but soon returned, not experiencing any change. I bent myself to the work of writing a dreary story and worked with surprising rapidity until I wrote 'A hearse passed the house and —' Here I stopped. A strange presentiment told me that I would never finish the sentence. Next day I took up my pen to finish it, but I had not touched the paper with the pen when a piercing shriek caused me to spring to my feet and rush from the room just in time to see a horse, attached to a buggy, dashing wildly toward my gate. A frightened woman was in the buggy and I rescued her. I put the manuscript away and devoted myself to my new acquaintance; our friendship grew into love and finally we married. Then followed ten years of happiness. I did not tell my wife of the unfinished manuscript. but one day she found it and begged me to finish it. I did not like to confess my foolish fears, and finally I told her that I would. The next night, after my wife had gone to bed, I took down the story and read it over. I would finish it for her sake. I took up the pen and was just in the act of touching the paper when my wife called me. I ran to her and found her in a dying condition, having being attacked by rheumatism of the heart."

"Have you ever attempted since to finish it?"

"Yes. After my wife had been dead for several years I determined one night to finish the story. I went to the desk, but had no sooner dipped my pen in the ink when a noise in an adjoining room attracted my attention. Hurrying into the room I found my son on the floor dead. He had always been in wretched health and had committed suicide."

"Do you ever expect to finish the story?"

"I expect to try again. It is impossible for me to remain superstitious. even though I may have a powerful cause for doing so. Of course, all this would have happened even if I had not begun the story. I think that next Tuesday night, if I feel like it, I shall devote myself to the completion of the work, for I desire to see it in print. Come up and see me start off."

We were busy when Tuesday night came, and—cowardly confession—were not sorry when something kept us away. Early Wednesday morning we hurried to the house where for years the professor had lived. The horrible thought seized us that he had taken up his pen to finish the story and had fallen dead. Some time elapsed before we had the courage to knock at the door. At last we rapped.

No answer.

Another rap.

No answer.

With blood almost at freezing point, and with hair standing erect, we shoved open the door. The old man sat leaning back in his chair, eating pie.

"Come in," he said cheerfully. "You see I have just finished that story, and it gave me an appetite for pie. Pie's a good thing to eat after you finish up a story, but you want to wait until you are through writing."

"Did you hear any strange noises?" we asked "when you began to write."

"Well, yes. A calf over in the adjoining yard bawled for a while. Oh, yes, you are thinking about that story I told you some time ago. Why, my dear fellow, you should not have been so foolish as to have believed me. I never was married, you know. Have some pie."—Arkansaw Traveler.

The Mineral Riches of Tonquin.

Its gold mines, says a writer in the Paris Figaro, can rival those of California and Australia. The natives use that metal for exchange; the females of the Muongs of the Black River, on their way to and from market, gamble with thousands of francs' worth of it, without caring wheather they win or lose. The mines of Talan, near Yuen-Kiang, on the Red River, were visited by the Commission of the Meikoug, who found gold there in bars as well as dust. Still higher near the source of the Red River, the precious metal is obtained in large quantities. Silver also is not rare, and copper is found everywhere, all the domestic utensils of the people being made of this metal. The tin mines are not worked for want of capital, although those worked near Mong-tsze, in Yunnan, near the Red River, are the most valuable known to exist. Zinc, lead, iron, and bismuth are also known. The coal mines, however, are the most important of all. Tonquin produces also musk, tortoise shell, mother-of-pearl, wax, silk, peacocks' feathers, as well as those of the blue pheasant, and other birds of brilliant plumage. "In short," concludes the Figaro, "it is a rich country, and worth the trouble of occupying it."

An exchange says that a few nights ago, while a Baptist minister was attending divine service, a negro boy and two women took the preacher's horse and buggy and drove them nearly to death. This account illustrates the extreme of refined cruelty. How that buggy must have suffered! What agonizing screams must have been wrenched from that poor buggy as it jolted over the hard-pan roadway! We seriously object to lynching on general principles, but in extreme cases like this—well, we could willing see lynch law take its stern, relentless course. No fate is hard enough for the fiend who drives a buggy to within an inch and a half of death's door and leaves it exposed to the fury of the elements.

LIFE IN LONDON.

Sunday in Petticoat Lane.

After entering the great thoroughfare of St Mary Axe, E. C., by Leadenhall street, keep straight ahead, leaving the old Church of St. Mary at the Axe on your right, and you will set foot in the land of Israel. St Mary Axe—"Simmery Axe," according to the pronunciation of the natives—is built on the site occupied in mediæval ages by the good monks of Bury's Abbey. It early became a favorite resort of Hebraic commercial activity. Two old rhymes describe the Jews of the period:

Jews from St. Mary Axe for jobs so wary,
That for old clothes they'd even axe St. Mary.

At the end of the street is a mart, or rather a labyrinth of marts, or clothes exchanges. On week days hawkers, purchasers and loungers have access to it on the payment of one penny per day. Wholesale buyers and dealers pay three pence. On Sundays admission is free. The place is unprepossessing, indifferently roofed, and not savory. Noisy activity prevailed at the booths when I first visited it on a week day. There was not a Christian in the market. Strong men with big bags, sharp youths with distorted parcels, and bearded enchantresses with doubtful bundles were incessantly coming in and emptying their loads. Little gentleness was displayed in the proceedings, which reminded me of the manner in which scavengers discharge their wares. Lots of hats, bonnets, boots, dresses, coats and uniforms were shuffled out on the pavement, raising clouds of dust. The sorting was quickly done. Even the most wretched rags, magically handled, soon got stretched out in a marketable shape. There are sly contractors in those regions who drive a first class trade by giving an artificial lustre to the most shabby articles, and by freshening those most crushed.

The day was hot. I saw many hands on the threshold of the small houses lining the narrow streets and lanes bordering the marts, all needles, hair pencils, brushes, paints, and dyes. In the middle of one street, leading out of the celebrated Petticoat lane, the most famous track of the rag fair, two artists with paint brushes and pots of black paint feverishly moved around a tottering trestle. They were giving a final touch to an incredible lot of forlorn garments which were prospering under the treatment. The cloths were reviving, the buttons rallying, and the silky materials were renewing their youth.

But Sunday is the day on which the great rag fair is to be seen. The best time is in the morning, when Christians ought to be at church. I was there a little while ago. The heat was almost intolerable. The bells had just begun to ring for the morning prayers at St. Botolph in Bishopsgate, where is buried the great merchant, Sir Paul Pindar, the celebrated money lender of James I., Charles I., and Charles II., who lived hard by. A bevy of children and of flower girls were buzzing about the streets selling, at a penny apiece, roses which would have adorned a queen's table. "Good luck to you," sweetly said a rosy little girl, with remarkably loving blue eyes, of whom I had bought a rose. Poor little darling, she was as grateful as though she had received a ten shilling piece.

The marts and streets are full. The rag fair is in all its glory. "Buy, buy, buy!" roar hundreds of husky and panting voices. "Won't ye 'ave the bloody lot for five bob and a tanner? This his no second 'and rot. Come to the hold fine gents. Hall stunners, hall!"

"Buy, buy, buy! Hask for Aaron's braces my boys. "Ere his a two years' wear for sixpence. Buy, gents, buy!"

"Buy, buy, friends! Look 'ere—a coat of Saville row. You will 'ave it for a dollar honly because I want to give hit away and to go to my mother. Well, 'pon my word and 'onor, the lining halone is worth twenty bob."

"Buy! 'Ere is a sock for a kick, three pairs for a tanner, hall new. The hunrivalled firm. None of your miserly habatements and discount tricks."

"Buy, buy! 'Ere is a new suit complete for fifteen bob. No shickery shoddy with hus. Don't be bashful. Tell me where yer 'onor can present 'imself with a sit-upon for three bob like this 'ere harticle. Come on; close hit; shell out; friend. Don't let this 'ere gent take ye for a sweep."

"Buy, buy! Cawn't ye stop for 'alf a second? Gaze at that 'ere new topper, and if ye meet with a masher in the park with a more haristocratic harticle, my name ain't Absalom. It's honly four and six. None of your fibs of tanner and flatch."

"Buy, buy! 'Ere is a silk 'andkerchief for a kick; the best flannel shirts hever hoffered for sale for two bob; a pair of drawers as worn by the royal princes and the late John Brown for a twelfer."

Here is a short woman, with the waist of a lifeboatman, ready for action, with an ugly wig, a terribly hooked nose, a rancid complexion, and eyes that a duchess would give her dukedom for. She calls me "my friend" first, and then more affectionately "my dear." She would feel better if she could sell me some of those jewels to take them to "my darling" at home, who, she is sure will be much disappointed if I don't. Although I resist her entreaties, she does cease to be agreeable.

But what is that tremendous uproar hard by? It must be a violent quarrel, for voices are fierce, and their unharmonious strains mingle with the sounds of hard blows. Not a bit of it. This tumult simply proceeds from a dozen or so of self-sacrificing men engaged in disposing, as they say, against their own interest, of an unprecedented bargain in clothes. Nothing beats the intenseness which immolation kindles. The philanthropists are getting quite mad about it. More than partially undressed, screaming as for life, the water running down their swollen faces, stamping and fuming, entirely pumped out, now and then they fold up with rage and beat with fury the articles they have praised the most, as the acrobat lashes the child that misses a trick.

Petticoat lane is so full that I am forced to the contemplation of a display of variously sized sausages sold by Abraham, who claims the invention of no less a boon than the celebrated German wurst. I am so long pinned there that I fall into fruitless reflections as to how the Hebrew reconciles the commands of his faith with the commerce in pork. However, a brisk trade is going on there also, but it is only fair to add that unprejudiced Christians considerably swell on Sundays the crowd of Jewish purchasers.

The middle of the street is occupied by a long line of trunks full of cheap articles. A man selling gingerbread is using ungentle language to a boy who cries and protests that he has given the costermonger a shilling. The Jew denies it. The majority of the crowd sympathize with the child. Nothing daunted the Israelite pledged himself by the "bloody" life of every one of us that he shall never return to the boy what the boy never gave. There are symptoms of a free fight. A tall police officer rams through the crowd, inquires, and the Jew breaks his oath and hands over the disputed coin. This is the only quarrel I witnessed in the fair.

The locality seems doomed to be transformed. Half of Petticoat lane has already abandoned its popular name, and is called Middlesex street. At the corner of this section of it and of Tripe yard, an unengaging spot, I suddenly beheld, but only for one second, one of the most perfect faces of women the imagination can conceive. The admirable creature had eyes and hair blacker than nature, with a divine mouth and a complexion of marble. She was tall. She must have been twenty years old. She made for the tavern at the corner of the yard and of the street, a dull saloon with a loan office attached. I hastened to see more of her, but she had disappeared. If her soul is as refined as her person, what a horrible life must be hers in those parts!

A few yards off another loan office loans money daily from £3 to £300. If you want money you can easily obtain it, provided you have quite overcome the prejudices you may have been reared in with regard to big interest, for money lenders are not scarce in the rag fair.

But here is something cheaper—a glass of sparkling, but not intoxicating, champagne for a penny. The crowd is not thin around the booth, and its noise sounds queer with the voice of an old cripple mournfully bawling, "A poem in memory of 184 little ones who died by a sad calamity at Sunderland."

"Ave a look at these ere beautiful jewels," says a young woman to her companion. "They ain't dear—a lot of unredeemed pledges." It is at the corner of a street leading out of Petticoat lane. The shop is small and low. The wares are of a mixed kind. There are hams, biscuits, cheese, all descriptions of salt and oiled fish, and other goods. The window of the shop is raised. On a table placed inside against it is an assortment of gems, watches, chains, and medals. Business is transacted on both sides of the window. An old Jew, with a thin and remarkably fine face, dressed like a man ready for a call in Mayfair, is effecting the sale. In many shops there are to be noticed men of the same well-to-do aspect, giving you the idea that many of the old, black, rickeity stores are rented by men who generally dwell in a different hemisphere.

Jews from all lands have established themselves on this spot. Lazarus, Breslau Israel, Abraham, Fernandez, Solomon, David, Rodriguez, Tarina, Ismael, Aaron, Nathan, Samson, Moses, Cassel, Naberro, Jacob, and other Biblical or geographical names, of which many repeatedly appear on houses often marked by the Hebrew characters, testify to the fact. Everywhere you meet them—in White Rose court, an ugly narrow passage; in Baker and Bull courts which are not an inch better, and in Cutler, Ellison, and White streets, the rivals of Petticoat lane. The interior of the squalid houses in which the members of this curious settlement live is mostly well kept and comparatively clean. The race certainly does not fear the water. Indeed, it has made the article an object of trade. I saw in an unlovely lane, where vegetables, meat, and fish were sold at fabulously low figures, the following words written on the wall:

Hot water sold here from 6 A. M. to 12 P. M.

Not many yards from that spot resided at Crosby Hall Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterward Richard III., the cruel murderer of the children of Edward IV., his nephews Talking.

Why is it that women have generally so much the advantage over men in the matter of talk? Not, of course, over all men, for there are some of the tougher sex that can talk and talk and talk any one woman both blind and dumb. But as a general thing the women have it. What is the use of that man in Tennyson's "Brook" telling what he suffered for "Katy's sake?" We are bound to believe that a great many have suffered a great deal more from Katy herself, or from some of her sisters. Just let them get started and they go on forever and a day. It does not matter what the subject is. A girl fresh from a fashionable boarding school, a "superior party" in the common room of a country hotel that keeps boarders, a successful whiskey seller's wife, or the "lady" of a man that has made his pile dabbling in bank stocks or land scrip, a woman that is first cousin to a Church of England clergyman's wife, or the very pronounced authority on theatrical matters and church socials. Indeed, anything or any one. How loud to be sure they talk! How they do lay down the law! How they do dwell upon charades and tableaux vivants! How solemnly they think that in these days professing Christians cannot be too careful! How they proclaim on the house tops that when they were about to be married their inexorable papa required them to make "one shirt each!" How private theatricals "with a religious turn" are exceedingly useful in "church schools" and colleges for giving the "young lady pupils" ease in ordinary life, etc., etc.! Oh, dear, to be sure! And all the while it is as impossible as it was for Captain Webb to swim the whirlpool to convince these women that they are ridiculously vulgar talkers all the same.

At the seaside; "Why, dear, we must have a nurse; the baby is teething, and will cry all night." "Well, let him yell; those stuck-up neighbors of ours, the Joneses, are in the next boarding-house. If they hear him they will recognize his voice, and know that we are at the shore, too."

A case in point: "You know, love," said an elderly maiden at Mount Desert, "it makes one look from six to ten years younger every time one crosses the ocean." "Why, aunty," hereupon ventured a pert young minx, sitting by, "you've crossed so often, I wonder you don't look immensely young."

The Standard.

MARKDALE, AUGUST 23RE 1883.

SERIOUS FIRE IN ARTEMESIA.

M. SULLIVAN'S FARM BUILDINGS AND CONTENTS CONSUMED.

About 3 o'clock Tuesday morning, while the family were all sleeping soundly, they were awakened by the cracking of fire which by this time had gained considerable headway in the kitchen. Mr. Sullivan was not at home, having gone the day previous to Durham to attend the cattle fair, Mrs. Sullivan and family, the youngest being but three weeks old, with the servant girl, narrowly escaped with their lives, nothing being saved. The wind blew towards the barn which stood about 15 rood distant, and a spark from the burning house fired it, which was speedily consumed with the contents consisting of about 45 tons of hay Reaper, Mower, Sulky rake, cutter, cutting box, wagon and various other implements and machinery. His loss will amount to at least $2.000. We did not learn the amount of the insurance, but it is light compared with the heavy loss.

BEHEADED ON THE TRACK.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock on Sunday morning a man named Henry Moss, met a terrible fate on the Toronto Grey & Bruce Ry., near Markdale. He and a young man named Jesse Iles, who lives at 106 York street, were on their way to Toronto from Owen Sound, having been working on the Algoma Mills section of the Canada Pacific. before getting on board Moss laid in a quantity of liquor and when near the above village became almost unmanageable under its influence, getting up and stamping about the car like a madman. He was then seen to go out and cross the platforms to enter the baggage car, a move unnoticed by Conductor Thompson. No more of him was seen until his remains were found on the track a few hours later crushed and mutilated in a horrible manner. The head was literally torn away from the trunk and mashed to fragments. A Mr. Lawlor, of Woodbridge, saw him fall from the train. It is supposed in attempting to pass from one car to another he fell between. The body was brought to the city on the 6 o'clock train, and by direction of superintendent Wilson, taken to the morgue. Mr. Wilson stated at police headquarters yesterday that Iles holds a cheque on the railroad for the wages of the deceased. Iles, however, denies this flatly, declaring that all he knows about the cheque is that when the conductor asked Moss for his fare, the latter pulled out the cheque instead of his ticket. Iles told him that he had best keep his cheque, upon which he put it in his pocket again The deceased ws 35 years of age, and has been about a year out from England.

A GRATIFYING ASSURANCE.

A lady was walking along one of our streets one day last week. Passing a friend's house she observed two or three of the little children playing on the lawn.

Well, my dears, I see you are enjoying yourselves.

Yes, they replied.

And you've just got a little sister.

Yes,

How is your ma asked the lady.

She is still in bed, they replied.

I think then I shall go in and see her.

Do, said the children, it is not catching.

Paris Green fresh and pure, at the Medical Hall, A. Turner & Co.

The telegraph strike has ended after a long and determined, yet unsuccessful effort to force better terms.

The brick layers are now busy on Mr. Benson's new residence, which will be a comfortable and substantial dwelling when complete.

Accident.—While Mr. Thos. Campbell was driving his reaper to the field, on Tuesday, with a spirited team, the horses took fright and ran, throwing Mr. Campbell off, the reaper was considerably damaged but Mr. Campbell escaped serious injuries.

Mr. T. J. Patton, traveller for H. A. Nelson & Sons, of Toronto and Montreal, was in town on Monday, with an immense assortmen of samples of Fancy Goods. Mr. Patton was unable to procure sufficient room at the Hotels and had to open his goods in Dufferin Hall. We had the pleasure of a run through this handsome and varied assortment, which is very attractive.

Artemesia, Aug. 14.—To the Massey Manufacturing Co., Toronto. We the undersigned having witnessed the trial of the Massey "Low Down Binder," purchased by Mr. Joseph Beaty, from Mr. A. S. Vandusen, Agent Flesherton, hereby certify that said binder did splendid work on barley which was quite green and thistley although new, was easily worked by a light team, and in every way gave good satisfaction, and we would say to all who can work a binder to purchase a "Massey Low Down." Jos. Beaty, Wm. Burnett, Thos. Brady, Wm. Galbraith, Robert Carter, Jas. Watson, Geo. Crow, W. A. Whittaker John Graham, John Piper, James Bryne, W. H. Elder, Andrew Beattie.

The harvest is at least ten days late commencing this season.

CANDIES, NUTS and DATES, a large variety of each just arrived at Montgomery's bakery.

Quite a number of selfbinding reapers have been introduced in this vicinity and are giving satisfaction.

H. Foster has removed to Holland Centre, where he is now doing a fair trade considering the quiet season of the year.

A terrific thunder storm passed over this place Wednesday morning accompanied with high winds heavy rain and hail, Another pour came down about six in the evening.

Mr. Lucas, Banker, has purchased the Flesherton steam sash and door machinery from Mr. Hooper, he has also bought the Dufferin Hall Markdale, from J. H. Hull, and will convert it into a Sash & Door Factory. This will be quite an aquisition to our village, the building is well suited for such a factory.

Since the Dufferin Hall has been sold and will be used for other purposes, there will be a public hall required, there is also a skating rink wanted; We would suggest that some of our townsmen build a rink with a hall above it. An investment of $1.000 in this way would bring a rent of $200 a year without any diffiiculty.

Magistrates Court.—On Monday Mr. Jas. Free, a farmer in Holland Tp. who is also a sheep buyer, appeared before Messrs. Brown & Elliott, J. P's on a charge of stealing four sheep from Jas. Lyons, of Euphrasia. It would appear from the evidence that Lyon's sheep were on the road or in an open field and became mixed up with the drove while passing along the road. Mr. Free has ,however, to stand his trial at Assizes, and gave bail for his appearannce at said court.

Reports to hand show Saturday's storm to have been unusually severe. Barns and dwellings are struck by lightning and destroyed with all their contents. The heavy rain caused the rivers to rise rapidly, carrying away dams, bridges, and whatever obstacles impeded the overwhelming rush of water, and utterly ruining the crops in low lying places. Fortunately but one fatality is reported so far—that of a young man who lost his life while endeavouring to save his employers property.

The T. G. & B. Railway employees annual pic-nic, will take place at Shelburne, on Saturday next, 25th. There will be games for which $400 will be given in prizes. The citizens Brass band of Owen Sound and Prof. H. Lubar's Union Brass and Silver Cornet Band will be in attendance. Tickets from all stations and return only 40 cents, children under 12, 20 cents. Excursion train leaves Owen Sound at 7 a. m., and leaves Shelburne on the return trip, at 6.30 p. m.

The disaster which has befallen the Methodist church of Canada has given opportunity for the manifestation of a most kindly spirit on the part of the M. E. church. Before the ashes of the church had ceased smoking, an offer was made of the use of the M. E. building for the C. M. services, once every Sabbath, in the evening and in the morning alternately. On Monday the Official Board and the Trustee Board unanimously accepted it, expressing in the strongest terms their appreciation of a most brotherly and generous act. The first C. M. service will be held at 6.30 p. m. on Sunday next. Both congregations will worship together in the public services, but the church organizations will necessarily be distinct as to membership and finance to the end of the year. The C. M. Sabbath school meets at 9 a. m. The bible classes are to be united and meet on Tuesday. It meets on Friday at 1.45 for this week. The prayer meetings are to be held in one united service.—Meaford Monitor.

CHAPTER XIV.

LADY HONORIA.

Lady Honoria Rosett had arrived, bag and baggage, at Barfield House.

She was what is called a thoroughly "jolly" woman; indeed, that expressive, if slightly inelegant adjective, is the only one that can fitly be applied to her.

She was tall, dark, and large-framed—everything about her was big and pleasant. She had big black eyes, that were always wide open and always full of merriment; a big mouth that was perpetually laughing, two shiny rows of white teeth that were white and regular. She rode well, she danced well, she talked rather loud, and laughed louder still. She did not care very much what people thought of her; but she was decidedly popular for all that. She was full of energy and life; she was never sick or sorry; nothing ever vexed or tired her; she had an inexhaustible fund of good spirits and good nature, and never flagging vitality.

Such was the woman whom Lady Dyson had selected to efface from her son's mind the sweet, gentle image of low-voiced, soft-eyed girlhood, that was, however, more deeply impressed upon it than she had any idea of.

He was, however, exceedingly polite to his mother's guest. The first day of her visit he was seemingly quite delighted to go with her out riding, and he took the greatest pains to select a horse for her from amongst his own, which she would like. It took, it must be confessed, the strongest-backed animal in his stables to carry her comfortably; but when once mounted, nobody could have looked better or managed her steed with greater grace and dexterity than did this large-framed Amazon.

Sir Edgar, who admired beauty in any form, could not help thinking her very handsome, and she was so good tempered and easily pleased, and could talk so well on any subject, that he was guilty of no treachery to Lily in owning to himself that he really enjoyed his ride with her very much indeed.

As to poor Lily, when she appeared as usual after dinner that evening in the far-off corner of the drawing-room, where she was accustomed to sit silently with her needlework until the clock struck ten and released her from her weary bondage, she felt her heart sink within her as Lady Honoria, followed by her hostess, entered the room from the dining-room.

Lady Honoria was dressed in black satin with crimson roses in her dark hair, and at her bosom—it would have been impossible to imagine a finer made or more striking-looking woman.

She came in with an easy air of self-possession which is natural to a woman whose position in the world is undoubted, and who is certain that she is popular and beautiful.

"How pretty your room is, dear Lady Dyson, it reminds me so of Hallerton Castle. I do envy people who have taste; I myself have none whatever, not in furniture at least. But this room is so beautifully arranged, anybody can see at a glance that the taste is your own, and not the upholsterer's."

"Indeed, Lady Honoria, you flatter me too much, for it I chose the furniture, it is Edgar who arranges everything—it is he who has the taste."

"Ah! really," looking slowly about the room. "By the way, how altered he is! Do you know it is seven years since we last met; I think it was at the county ball; I was just out, I remember."

"Surely not so long ago as that?" demanded her hostess, politely.

"Oh, indeed, it is quite that—I am twenty-five and look every hour of it," she said, laughing merrily; "and your second son was there too—by the way what has become of him?"

"Curiously enough, I have just had a letter from Walter by the evening post. He is coming home almost directly, so you will see him; he has been in Paris lately."

"I am glad I shall see him; I think I liked him the best of the two in those days," she said, with blunt frankness, and Lady Dyson murmured something about his being of course a "dear fellow," but not equal, she feared, in steadiness and good conduct to his brother.

"I always like the black sheep of the family," said Lady Honoria, unabashed, and then for the first time she perceived Lily.

"Dear me! who is that young lady?" she asked, quite aloud, whilst Lily bent low over her work.

"Oh! it is only Miss Finch, my children's governess," answered Lady Dyson, carelessly.

Lady Honoria immediately walked into the corner where Lily sat and held out her hand.

"How d'ye do, Miss Finch? I did not see you when I first came in," and to Lady Dyson's intense vexation, she sat down by Lily's side and asked to look at her work. "What are you making?—a woollen quilt is it? Oh! I wish you would teach me that stitch, I do so want to learn it, and I have never met any body before who could do it; do let me try—you pass the wool over this finger and take two stitches with the right pin?" and when Sir Edgar came in he found the two girls seated thus on the distant sofa, with their heads close together over the knitting-pins and the scarlet wool, and he felt that he liked Lady Honoria better than ever.

"I hope you will give us some music, Lady Honoria. Will you not play or sing?" said Lady Dyson, who naturally was anything but pleased by the lesson in knitting, and inwardly determined that there should be no recurrence of it.

Lady Honoria rose smilingly—of course she would play or sing—was she not always ready to do anything that anybody asked her to do? She went to the piano, and Sir Edgar followed her, whilst Lily was left again in the solitude.

"She is everything that is perfect!" said the poor child sorrowfully; "beautiful, clever, and oh! how kind and good-hearted! Yes, she is a fit wife for him, I can see that; she is worthy of him if anybody is, in every way. How insignificant and dull I must seem to him by the side of her! But he could never mean to marry me, and now I see that this is the kind of wife he ought to have; I ought to be thankful that she is so nice, and so likely to make him happy."

And then, as she sat in her distant corner, there fell unseen a silent tear or two down upon her bright-colored wools, whilst she made up her mind to sacrifice her love in all unselfishness, and determined not to stand ever so little in the way of this story of fitting and appropriate affection, which was about to be played out under her eyes.

"It is better so," the poor child said to herself; "he would not be able to marry me; and he will never know how much I love him."

The following morning she lingered a little in the hall on her way to her daily task in the school-room, to watch Lady Honoria and Sir Edgar ride off again together across the green slopes of the park.

Lady Dyson came up unperceived.

"You are watching Sir Edgar and Lady Honoria, Miss Finch? Do they not make a handsome couple?"

Miss Finch started, but answered quietly in the affirmative:

"I really don't think Sir Edgar could have done better," continued Lady Dyson. "I am sure you will own, Miss Finch that she will make a charming wife."

"Are they—is Sir Edgar—engaged to her?" faltered Lily, turning white and faint in spite of all her brave resolutions.

"N—no—not exactly yet, but something very near it, perhaps. Of course this is a secret, Miss Finch, you will let it go no further; of course I treat you as one of the family—you will not mention this?"

"I should not think of doing so," she answered gently.

"Thanks—I am sure you will not. Oh, by the way, Miss Finch. I dare say it is very dull for you to come into the drawing-room after dinner, unless I am quite alone and can talk to you. I think, whilst we have company, you will find it more amusing to stay in the school room with your books. You can always borrow any of the novels out of the box from Mudie; it can't amuse you to sit by while other people are talking."

"Very well, Lady Dyson;" and Lily went her way meekly to the school-room. But she felt it hard that she might not even be on friendly terms with the happy girl who was to be Sir Edgar's wife.

The next morning came Stella and all her troubles about her sister; and Lily made that little expedition into Sir Edgar's library, on her friend's behalf, of which mention has already been made: and when she came out of it again, back again to the school-room, Lily was not quite so certain that Sir Edgar would marry Lady Honoria as she had been when she had gone in.

"You are doing very wrong, Sir Edgar," Lily had said to him, in answer to some indescribable proceedings on his part; "it is not fair to Lady Honoria, who seems so honest hearted and good."

"What has Lady Honoria to do with me?"

"Everything, I should say."

"Really, Miss Finch! What a remarkably clever woman you are becoming, and how much you seem to know about everything!"

"You ought not to laugh at me, Sir Edgar. I can see how nice and beautiful she is; and it does not make me unhappy—no, not at all."

"You stony-hearted little wretch!"

"Please, Sir Edgar, don't hold me. I must get back to Miss King. Please let go my hands."

There was an undignified little scuffle, and then Lily effected her escape, very red in the face, but not so unhappy at her heart.

Lady Honoria was the sort of person who never did things like anybody else; when she found that Lily did not come into the drawing-room in the evening, she invaded the school-room by day. She disturbed the current of the lessons considerably; she made Miss Finch teach her the knitting stitch; she helped Willie with his French translation, and Tommy with his sums; she cracked jokes with the little girls, and made herself as popular in the dingy little back room as she was in the drawing-room.

Lily became more and more convinced that she was the one woman in the whole world who in every way was worthy of Sir Edgar—it would break her heart, of course, whenever and whoever he married—but it would be the best and happiest thing for him to please his mother and to marry Lady Honoria, and she told herself that she would resign him to her patiently and even thankfully.

It was in the evening of that day—the same day on which Cecily startled her sister by suddenly appearing at the windows of Wrexham Hall—that Maud came running late into her governess's room.

"Walter has just come home!" she cried excitedly; "did you not hear him arrive, Miss Finch? and he says he has brought presents from Paris for each of us, that he will give us to-morrow. Oh, I wish to-morrow were here! Good-night, Miss Finch."

"Good-night, Maud," said Lily, unconcernedly. She did not know Walter Dyson or care that he had come home.

CHAPTER XV.

CECILY'S VIOLETS.

"Are there not some people named Dyson in this neighborhood?"

"Certainly; they are our nearest neighbors. Why do you ask? Have you not heard of them?"

"No; only that grandpa said something about some Dysons this morning," answered Cecily, carelessly.

The sisters were wandering up and down the garden walks together on the second morning after Cecily's arrival at Wrexham.

"Are they nice people?" questioned Cecily, presently,

"Nice is a comprehensive term," said Stella, laughing. Lady Dyson is certainly not 'nice;' she is rather disagreeable. Sir Edgar is—well, oh! nothing that could be described by that much-abused adjective, and as to the children——"

"Never mind the children. I meant, of course, they are in a good position in the county?"

"Of course; how odd of you to ask!"

"I don't see why it is odd—it is mere curiosity. By the way, is there not a second son?"

"Yes; a very black sheep, I have heard. But how stupid I am! Of course that is how you have heard of them. Mr. Walter Dyson has been in Paris; you must have met him there?"

"As if I were likely to know every Englishman in Paris! What a childish idea, Stella! What makes you say he is a black sheep? Who told you that?" she added, rather shortly.

She had stooped down to gather some early violets, and Stella could not see her face.

"Mrs. Finch said so, I think."

"Mrs. Finch is an ignorant, ill-natured woman. I wonder that you listen to her, Stella!" said Cecily, quite viciously, putting her violets together in a little bunch.

"I don't listen to her oftener than I can help," said Stella, laughing, "for I do not like her at all; you can't think how different her daughter is from her. By the way, it is Lily Finch who is governess to the young Dysons; you are sure to like her, she is so gentle, and lady like, and pretty, and ——"

"Pretty, is she?" interrupted Cecily, quickly—"do you really mean that she is pretty?"

"Yes, certainly," answered Stella; and she was a little bit surprised at the eagerness in her sister's manner. "Have you any objection to her being pretty?" she added, smiling.

"It is a mistake for a governess to be good-looking," answered Cecily, vaguely, as she stuck her violets in the front of her dress; and Stella could not help fancying—although she could not imagine for what reason—that she was decidedly annoyed to hear that Lily Finch was anything but plain and uninteresting.

Just then Mr. King opened the window of his library, and called out to Stella.

"Come here, Spitfire!" it was his favorite name for her. "I know you like arranging books."

"How can you know anything about my tastes, grandpa?"

"Well, I don't know much, I confess. I know that you are rather fond of contradiction, at all events. Do you like arranging books?"

"Not much. But I don't mind arranging yours, if that is what you want me to do."

"Come in, then, and help me."

"Will you wait for me, Cecily," said Stella, turning to her sister.

"Selfish old man!" grumbled Cecily. "Why can't he leave you in peace? No; I'll go for a walk by myself in the shrubbery; you won't be free for an hour, I dare say.

Stella went in. There was a whole pile of dusty volumes on the floor.

"I have turned them all out," explained the grandfather; "there are all sorts of odd volumes that have got mixed up together. Get a duster, and wipe them all, and then sort them and put them all back again in the order of the volumes."

"It is like the task that Fairy Crabtree set to the Enchanted Princess," observed Stella, as she sat down on the floor by the side of the heap of volumes; "as intricate, and nearly as insurmountable."

"What task was that? Was it to keep her temper?" said the old man sharply.

"No, it was to sort colored straws in a tub," she answered, beginning her task amongst the books. Presently she said to him. "Do you think me bad-tempered, grandpapa?"

"I am told that you have the temper of a virago!" he said, with a sort of a chuckle.

Stella colored deeply, but bent over her task. She knew very well who it was that told him that, and she felt deeply hurt and wounded that he should have done so. Why did he try to injure her in her grandfather's opinion? He must hate her, indeed!

"There is such a thing as righteous anger," she said, in a low, pained voice.

Mr. King glanced at her sharply.

"Was yours righteous, Stella?"

"I think it was deserved."

"Hum—I should not be surpirsed if it were," he answered, half to himself.

"I hope you don't think I have this dreadful temper that—that——" she said, timidly.

"I have never seen more temper about you than I like," he answered kindly. She looked up at him gratefully, but Mr. King's face was turned away.

There was a long silence. Stella worked away at her dusting and sorting, and the heap of books gradually diminished under her hands. Mr. King leaned his chin on his hand and seemed plunged in thought.

At last he turned towards her, looking at her steadfastly several minutes before he spoke.

"Stella, do you think it is quite hopeless for you and Norman to make it up?" he asked almost entreatingly.

She turned scarlet; there rushed rapidly through her mind the recollections of her last interview with her cousin. She remembered that she had spoken harsh words to him—words such as no man, she felt sure, would forgive. He had thought her violent and ill-tempered before—he must think her ten times worse now!

"Yes," she said sadly; "it is quite hopeless."

"Then it must be, Cecily," he said shortly; and again there was a long silence.

"It is a pity, a sad pity! I would have liked to have dealt justly to them all," he broke out again presently. "It would have been better to have been just to them; but I cannot let her suffer." He spoke more to himself than to her, and in a tone of such deep regret, and almost of sorrow, as filled her with surprise and distress.

With a sudden impulse of affection towards the strange-mannered old man, whom she had really learned to love and understand, Stella flung her arms around his neck.

"Grandpapa, dear grandpapa—don't be vexed about the future; let Norman and Cecily fulfil all your wishes. I know all that you have settled, and believe me, I am more than grateful for your goodness and generosity towards myself. It is far, far more than I deserve or even thought of."

He put her from him quietly, almost coldly.

"Go back to your tub and your colored straws, child," said this strange old man. "You are like all your sex, foolish and ignorant, and you jump at conclusions. You know nothing about my will, or what I am going to do for you, although you think yourself so wise."

She went back to her books hurt and wounded by his repulse, and spoke not one single word more to him. For nearly an hour she worked silently at the task set her, and he, all unknown to her, lay back in his chair and watched her—she thought he was asleep. When she had finished she rose, and would have left the room but his voice arrested her.

"Stella!"

"Yes, grandpapa."

"Give me a kiss, dear." He had never asked her to kiss him before—had never spoken to her so gently and affectionately. She bent over his chair and kissed him, and the orphan girl's eyes filled with sudden tears as she did so. But wisely she forebore to speak to him, and slipped away silently and gently out of the room.

Meanwhile Cecily was no longer either in the gardens or the shrubberies. At the precise moment that Stella was leaving her grandfather's presence on her way to seek her sister, that sister was standing in a distant corner of the park, sheltered by a small clump of trees and bushes, with her head upon a young gentleman's shoulder, and his arm disposed about her waist.

"This state of things is dreadful, Cecily! You really cannot expect me to stand it long," the gentleman was saying to her; "how am I to go on like this?"

"I thought you promised to do as I told you?"

"Yes; I suppose I should have promised anything then," significantly, "but I feel it hard to bear now."

"You must bear it, Walter; just think of what there is at stake! After all, it cannot be for long—he is very old and feeble. I don't believe he can live many months."

"And what are you going to do meanwhile?"

"Why, of course, I am to be engaged to my cousin Norman!" she answered laughing,

"Good Heavens!" he said below his breath; "how do you expect I am to stand it?"

"Oh, you—you can flirt with your sister's governess; I hear she is pretty."

"Take care—you had not better thrust me into that kind of a temptation. I have not a very constant disposition. If you were to be open and honest, and let everything be known at once——"

"Yes, and starve with you upon two hundred a year ever afterwards!" sneered Cecily; "you don't suppose I am such an idiot as that, when, with a little patience and ingenuity, I shall be able to command wealth. It is as much for your sake as my own."

"Am I never to see you a'one?" he said piteously.

"Oh, yes, we can meet sometimes by appointment; but don't make me jealous, Walter, or I warn you, I will turn the tables upon you, and make love to my cousin in right down earnest."

He looked very black as she said this; but there was no time for more.

"Good-bye," she said suddenly in a whisper. "I hear somebody coming." And they parted hurriedly and quickly.

Five minutes later Stella, wandering hither and thither in quest of her sister, was very much surprised in a narrow path through a wood, to meet a young gentleman whom she had never seen in her life before. He was tall, and rather handsome, and his face was very much flushed. Stella had not time, however, to remark this; all she did notice, as he stood aside to let her pass, was that he wore a bunch of violets in his button hole.

Not many minutes later she came across her sister leaning against a tree.

"Oh, here you are, Cecily; I have been hunting for you everywhere."

"I had lost my way," said her sister, going slowly towards her.

"Did you see a gentleman just now," inquired Stella. "I came upon a perfect stranger five minutes ago."

"No, I have not seen any one at all," answered Cecily, uninterestedly. "I wish I had: one might as well be in a desert as here. I have been horribly dull whilst you have been away."

"Cecily," said Stella, as they walked towards the house, "your violets are gone."

"So they are," she answered carelessly, putting up her hand to her bosom. "I suppose I must have dropped them."

CHAPTER XVI.

AN ENGAGEMENT.

"You have now been nearly a week in the house with your cousin Cecily; if you and she get on together you may as well speak to her and settle the matter," said Mr. King to his grandson.

"Yes, sir, if you wish it," said Norman, listlessly.

"You like her, I suppose—you have no objection to her?"

"None whatever. She seems a charming girl. I am quite ready to do as you wish, sir."

"You don't seem very keen about her," said the old man, unreasonably.

"I suppose one doesn't care so much when things are arranged in this practical manner," answered Norman, carelessly.

"You ought to be very thankful to have things practically arranged for you," said Mr. King, testily.

"Yes, sir, I know that, and I assure you I am not ungrateful," said Norman, earnestly; for, after all, he could make no objection to marry a pretty girl and to be made rich in consequence.

"Of course you know that I shall provide for you both?" said Mr. King, and Norman smiled. It struck him as odd that his grandfather should mention such a sumptuous disposition of his worldly goods as Wrexham Hall, and two thirds of his large fortune as "provision."

He was about to leave the room, when a sudden thought struck him.

"You will excuse me speaking of it, sir, but there is Stella. I hope you will be good to her."

"What do you mean?" rather sharply.

"You will, I hope, not forget to give her the share you spoke of. It would be sad if she were left unprovided for."

"Go and find Cecily, my boy," said the old man, waving his hand with a short, angry motion; "that is your business, and pray don't bother me about Stella."

Norman retired discomforted, fearing that his kindly remembrance of Stella's interest might have done her more harm than good.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Society of Friends has repealed the prohibition of the marriage of first cousins, and now for the first time in nearly two hundred years a bashful young Quaker can enjoy the placid and unexciting stagnation of marrying one of the family. Young man, no matter how much the law may permit it, don't do it. Think of an aunt for a mother-in-law.

THE FARMERS' CORNER.

Farm Work for September.

The fitting of the ground for any crop is of the most importance. Wheat and rye sown this month, require a rich mellow soil. Well-rotted manure should be liberally applied, either before or after ploughing. The more thoroughly this plant food is mixed through the soil, the quicker the young grain will obtain a vigorous growth. The harrow and roller need to be used until all the clods have been reduced to small mould. The roller should not pass after the seed is sown, leaving the surface packed hard, in which state it will crust over after the first rain. The somewhat ridged surface left by the grain drill also helps to hold the moisture and prevent winter-killing. Only the best plump grains of a superior variety of wheat should be sown. It is profitable to pay three times the market price for a fine quality of seed. The amount to be sold per acre depends much upon the thoroughness of preparation and the strength of the seed. Under the best conditions, only a few quarts of seed are needed, but, as a general rule, a bushel is sufficient, if sowed with a good drill. A light coat of rich and finely divided manure may be placed on the surface after sowing, with excellent effect. A heavy rain may closely follow upon the sowing, and therefore plough out the ground for the water at once.

The work in the root field consists in keeping the ground free from weeds, and pulling the superfluous roots for the cows. The great error in growing turnips, beets, etc., is in not thinning them sufficiently. White turnips may still be sown if the ground is rich. Potato stubble, treated with fine manure, will usually yield a paying crop. Early-sown beets and mangels may be harvested this month. Place the roots in long heaps, with straw over them, and afterwards take them to the root cellar, or cover the heaps with earth, to protect the roots from freezing. The roots should not heat at any time while stored.

Cut Buckwheat before the frost injures it. The grain shells easily, therefore the crop should be cut when the dew is on. After curing for a few days, the corn is ready to be threshed. Buckwheat, as it comes from the threshing machine, will heat badly if placed in large heaps; therefore spread the grain over the barn floor or other surface to dry. Beans are injured by heavy rains, and should be pulled and stacked as soon as they are ripe. In pulling, leave the vines in rows for a time to cure, and if a storm approaches, they can be placed in stacks around poles driven in the ground. A straw cover should be placed over each stack.

The earliest varieties of field corn will be ready for cutting this month. Corn should be cut so soon as the grain is glazed: the stalks are the best for fodder if cut at this time. Seed corn should have been selected before this, but if not, let some of the best stalks stand uncut with their ears of corn for future planting. The shocking needs to be done with care. If the stalks are poorly set and improperly tied, the shocks fall, the grain and fodder both suffer, and the husking is more difficult. Willow or other twigs may be used for securely tying the shocks of corn.

Potatoes are best dug so soon as ripe. If left in the earth, they may start into growth or become affected with the much-dreaded rot. It is well to sort the potatoes as they are gathered, excluding all unfit for the table. —Am. Agriculturist.

Aerial Navigation.

A certificate of incorporation has been filed in the office of the Secretary of State of Illinois for the "Aerial Navigation Company of Chicago," the object of the incorporators being "the transportation of passengers and freight through the air." It is asserted that the machines to be manufactured by this company are a perfection of the one tested at Hartford, Conn., several years ago, which, at the time attracted considerable interest. Probably this refers to several trials of a balloon made by Mr. E. F. Ritchel, of Bridgeport, Conn., who exhibited in Hartford, in June, 1878, a balloon with propelling apparatus attached by which the upward and downward movements of the balloon could be governed, and by which in calm weather its course could be directed.

The balloon was a horizontal cylinder of silk, twelve feet long and twenty-four inches diameter, capable of containing about 3,000 feet of gas. Suspended to it by cords and steel rods was a flat frame of brass pipe, pointed at each end, and having a seat for the operator. In front of the seat was a gear wheel with two cranks, connected by a vertical shaft and a horizontal shaft to two propeller wheels, one at the lower end of the vertical shaft under the frame, and the other in front of the operator, and this wheel was attached to the shaft by a universal joint so that it could be turned a distance of about thirty degrees from a shaft in a horizontal plane by the feet of the aeronaut. This wheel was the propelling power and also the steering device. The levitating power of the balloon was barely sufficient to raise the apparatus and its load, the vertical propeller assisting if a rapid rise was desired, and bringing the balloon down without emitting any of the gas.

At one trial, on a calm day, the balloon rose from the baseball grounds at Colt's Meadows, Hartford, passed over Colt's factory, and nearly over the Connecticut River, turned about and returned, descending to the ground at the place from which it started, the distance being probably half a mile and return, the balloon's height after rising from the earth varying from 300 to 400 feet, or thereabout.

At another trial, on the succeeding day, with quite a stiff breeze blowing, the aeronaut was unable to turn his balloon around, or to stem the wind, and was forced a distance of nearly nine miles, when he descended and came back, with his balloon, by carriage. But on this occasion he descended once on his trip to the dooryard of a farmer, procured a glass of water from the well, and rose again, hoping to make a return trip.

No accurate test was ever made of the propelling or lifting power of the two fans, but they were sufficient, as proved by the repeated experiments, to raise, lower, and steer the balloon except in a strong wind, the operator rotating the cranks at the rate of 100 revolutions per minute, producing, by means of pinions, a revolution of the fans of 3,500 turns per minute.

The True Home.

The truest home is often in houses not especially well kept, where the comfort and happiness, rather than the preservation of the furniture, is first consulted. The object of home is to be the centre, the point of tenderest interest, the pivot on which family life turns. The first requisite is to make it so attractive that none of its inmates shall care to linger long outside its limits. All legitimate means should be employed to this end, and no effort spared that can contribute to the purpose. Many houses called homes, are kept with waxy neatness by painstaking, anxious women, who are so oppressive in their nicety as to exclude all home-feeling from their spotless precincts. The very name of home is synonymous with personal freedom and relaxation from care. But neither of these can be felt where such a mania for external cleanliness pervades the household as to render everything else subservient thereto. Many housewives, if they see a speck on the floor or wall, or even a scrap of thread or a bit of paper on the floor, rush at it as if it were the seed of pestilence which must be removed on the instant. Their temper depends upon the maintenance of perfect purity and order. If there be any failure on their part, or any combination of circumstances against them, they fall into a pathetic despair, and can hardly be lifted out. They do not see that cheerfulness is more needful to home than all the spotlessness that ever shone. Their disposition to wage war upon maculateness of any sort increases until they become slaves to the broom and dust-pan. Neatness is one thing, and a state of perpetual house-cleaning quite another.

Out of this grows by degrees the feeling that certain things and apartments are too good for daily use. Hence, chairs and sofas are covered, and rooms shut up, save for special occasions, when they are permitted to reveal their violated sacredness in a manner that mars every pretense of hospitality. Nothing should be bought which is considered too fine for the fullest domestic appropriation. Far better is the plainest furniture, on which the children can climb, than satin and damask which must be viewed with reverence. When anything is reserved or secluded, to disguise the fact is extremely difficult. A chilly air wraps around it, and the repulsion of strangeness is experienced by the most insensible.

There are few persons who have not visited houses where they were introduced to what is known as the company parlor. They must remember how uncomfortable they were while sitting in it; how they found it almost impossible to be at ease, and mainly for the reason that their host and hostess were not themselves at ease. The children were watched with lynx eyes, lest they should displace or soil something; so that the entertainment of friends became very much like a social discipline. They must recall, too, how sweet the fresh air seemed out of doors, and they inwardly vowed, in leaving the temple of form and fidgettiness, that something more than politeness would be required to incite them to return.

Home is not a name, nor a form, nor a routine. It is a spirit, a presence, a principle. Material and method will not, and cannot, make it. It must get its light and sweetness from those who inhabit it, from flowers and sunshine, from the sympathetic natures which, in their exercise of sympathy, can lay aside the tyranny of the broom and the awful duty of endless scrubbing.

An Aquatic "Marquis."

How small a world this is to be sure! In our early youth a roving disposition and a love for manly sports and exercises—look out ye scribes who throw off big words from small stomachs—used to take him, amongst other entertainments, to a sheet of water named "Hollingworth Lake," near Manchester, England. The lake is some mile and a half in length, and mighty proud Mancunians and other residents in its vicinity are of this (to them) big aqueous expanse. In it and on it we have passed many happy hours in the lang syne, and on several visits was highly entertained with a clever ornamental swimmer named Marquis Bibbero. Our readers must not surmise that this was a scion of the British aristocracy. Nothing of the sort. He was a weaver, or spinner, or something of that sort. It is quite common in rural Lancashire for illiterate and foolish parents to christen their children "Marquis," "Squire," and even "Duke," just as Americans bestow post-baptismal handles upon children of a larger growth. Well, in pursuit of pabulum for the intelligent reader, we the other day made enquiries into the antecedents of Bebriel, the latest man who has expressed a determination to court death at Niagara, and lo! Bebriel and Ribbero prove to be one and the same person. Why, if Bebreil-Bibbero is not an old man he must have discovered the famous elixir, for it must be fifteen or twenty years since we saw him—then approaching his prime. Anyway, he is old enough to know better than attempt, or rather "tempt," Niagara's whirlpool, and, between us, reader, we do not believe he ever meant to. Advertising has been reduced to a fine art in this new world of ours!

Here are some figures which may interest Temperance reformers and others: During the year 1882 there were 38,377,820 gallons of proof spirits distilled in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, of which 19,206,892 gallons were distilled in Scotland, 10,124,467 in England, and 9,046,461 in Ireland. England, however, consumed 16,811,494 gallons, Scotland 6,502,955, and Ireland 5,239,815. It has been so commonld taken for granted that the average Irishman is never wihout a bottle of whiskey under his arm—an idea founded chiefly upon the typical stage Irishman—that it will doubtless be a matter of surprise to many to find that there is really less drinking done in Ireland than in either England or Scotland. Of course if one comes to make comparisons based on the relative populations of the three countries, it may possibly be found that Ireland drinks more than is good for her; nevertheless the fact remains that there is less whiskey distilled and drank in Ireland than in England or Scotland. Pat has faults enough, Heaven knows; but a propensity to drink whiskey is no more characteristic of Pat than it is of John Bull or Sandy. They would all three be better, doubtless, were they to rid themselves of the propensity which exists.

Fruit in Summer.

Lightness is the first essential alike in the food and drink taken in warm weather. There is then less work to be done, less waste of tissue, less need of the pre-eminently muscle-forming and heat-producing substances meat and bread; and fruit, as being both palatable and easily obtainable, is much in use. Its advantages are that it provides a seasonable change of diet, light and wholesome if well chosen, and a palatable tonic and stimulant of digestion with aperiens properties. There are few who cannot enjoy it in one form or another. For diabetes the only least desirable kinds, as certain nuts and almonds, are available, all others, as containing sugar, being forbidden. Sufferer from acid dyspepeia must select carefully and limit their consumption to the least irritating—a few strawberries and a few grapes. Diarrhœa and dysentry preclude the use of all fruit. On the other hand, for constipated persons it is sometimes the only reliable remedy which they can use coutinuously with comfort; it is also of benefit in reneal diseases, by its action on the bowel. Atonic persons generally take it well, and feel the better for its digestive property. Those in normal health may eat almost any ripe fruit. The bland varieties are the most wholsome and nutritious—strawberries, apples, pears, grapes and gooseberries. The last named, however, with currants and raspberries, are less wholesome than the others. Stone fruits are apt to disagree with the stomach; but the more watery, as peaches and large plums, are better than the smaller and drier, as apricots and damsons. The pulp of oranges renders them heavy. Among other foreign fruit bananas are wholesome. Dried fruits, and the skins of fruit in general, are indigestible. Nuts, the edible part of which is really the seed, contain much albumen and some fat in a condensed form, and are particularly difficult of digestion. Fruit may be taken with a meal or on an empty stomach. In the former case it promotes digestion by it gently irritating effect on the mucous membrane of the stomach and intestine. If an aperient effect be desired it had better be taken in the morning before breakfast or between meals. A succulent and pleasantly acid variety is best for both of these purposes while it is also a food. The quantity of fruit which should be taken depends on the kind. If it belong to the bland nutritious class, a healthy person may now and then partake of it as freely as of any other wholesome food; but he will gain most benefit if he take only a little and take it regularly. The same may be said of the invalid with whom fruit agrees. Cooking removes much of the acidity from crude fruit and renders it lighter as well as more palatable. So treated, it is productive of good and at harm: but it is a fundemental principle th whatever fruit is eaten uncooked it must be fully ripe and not over ripe. This may sound trite, and, indeed, the principle is commonly admitted; but not, it would seem, by all, for we still find people, and not a few, who will themselves deliberately take and worse, will give to the children, green gooseberries, green apples, &c., the very hardness of which, apart from their acid pungency, suggest their unfitness for digestion. Such people use as food an acid irritant poison, whose necessary action is to cause excessive intestinal secretion, with more or less of inflammation. Hence arises diarrhœa. On the other hand, fruit, which is overripe, in which fermentation has begun, is a frequent cause of this disorder and equally to be avoided, and perhaps also more difficult to avoid because the insidious beginning of decay is not easily recognized. It should never be forgotten by any who incline to follow the season in their feeding, that the want of such precautions as the above may produce that dysinteric form of diarrhœa. "British cholera," which is occasionally as rapidly fatal as the more dreaded Asiatic type of that disease.—The British Medical Journal.

The interest of most modern fiction turns on the joys and woes, the trials and triumphs of love. The novelist delights in episodes in which the tender passion is active. And yet, strange to say, no romancist has ever tried to put before us what—the experience of all who have passed through a period of amatory ecstasy will bear us out—is the most delicious, tender, rapturous part of the billing and cooing of the smitten. They can describe their gestures and reproduce their whispered nothings which mean so much, but they cannot give us their silence; which is the best part of the whole thing. Why do they not indicate in some way—by a row of dots or stars, say, or a blank space—these intervals of Beulah stillness?

J. N. SUTHERLAND, St. Catharines.

My Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your favor of yesterday's date, asking my experience with regard to RHEUMATINE, and I have no hesitation whatever in pronouncing it a success in my case, and in heartily recommending the remedy to those suffering from Rheumatism. I suffered for months with that trouble in my right arm and shoulder, and often was unable to use my hand, and at night the pain was frequently so great as to render sleep an impossibility. I must confess that I entertained a repugnance to "patent" medicines, but some of my friends persuaded me to try "Rheumatine," and although it may be true that I might have got well without it, one thing I do know, that after taking four bottles the pain took its departure, and I have now the full use of my arm. I heartily wish you unbounded success, as I fully believe your remedy is all that you advertise it to be.

I am, my dear sir, yours most truly,

Fall wheat is very scarce and of inferior quality, the prespects for spring grain are splendid.

The hay crop here was something immense, there should be no scarcity of feed during the coming winter.

Mr. Robt. Shannon's large frame barn was raised last week, Messrs. C. Gilbert and J. Cooey, were chosen captains. Owing to a heavy rain which came on when the timbers were together, the raising had to be adjourned till the following day, when captain Gilbert won the victory, partly, perhaps, owing to two of his apponents men deserting, they didn't however go over to the other side but rather to assist the cooks who did not appear to appreciate their assistance as they declined their proffered help the second day which necessitated their return to the ranks. This barn is 48x64 ft. on a stone foudation calculated for stables. Several other new buildings are being erected in this neighborhood.

During the thunder storm of Wednesday the 22nd, she sat down and sang some of Moody and Sankeys hymns for the old folks, she stopped singing and began to read, when she was struck by lightning and rendered unconscious. She remained in the condition for about six hours and died at 1 o'clock in the morning.

THE MILLS OF MONTREAL.

The Hochelaga and St. Anne Cotton Mills

[Special Correspondence of Toronto Truth]

The recent visit of the Ontario Press Association to the Hochelaga Cotton Mills renders the present a fitting occasion to notice the cotton manufacturing industry of Montreal. Hochelaga, as most western readers know, is the chief eastern suburb of Montreal, and the Hudon Mills, situated on St. Mary street, some distance beyond the city limits, are the largest, as well as one of the oldest cotton mills in the Dominion. The building is of brick and is five stories high. From the front it has the appearance of great magnitude and activity, and an inspection bears out the appearance in both respects. It is 700 feet long and 75 feet wide, irrespective of two large wings in the rear; and there are over 400 windows in the front of the building alone. The motive power which drives this immense establishment consists of two pairs of compound engines, made by Woods, of Bolton, England, and exerting together 1,500 horse-power. The principal fly-wheel is 32 feet in diameter, its companion 30 feet in diameter, and each weighs 30 tons. They are supplied by 10 steel boilers of Canadian make, and 6 of English make. In another part of the building is an engine of 200 horse-power, devoted wholly to the bleachery. The building is supplied with 4,000 or 5,000 feet of hose, giving nearly 1,000 feet to each flat, and there are 25 hydrants from which the hose can operate, irrespective of the system of automatic sprinklers. Steam power, for fire extinguishing purposes, supplies four steam pumps, which, from the city waterworks, can throw a stream over the top of the building from the ground. Each flat is provided with automatic sprinklers on which there is always a pressure of 60 lbs. per inch, so that in case of a fire starting in any one of the main rooms this should be sufficient to put it out under ordinary circumstances. The interior arrangements of the factory from a sanitary point of view are very satisfactory, the place being well lighted and ventilated and provided with good closets. Its airy situation immediately overlooking the St. Lawrence is a great point in its favor, from a sanitary aspect.

To give an idea of the vast capacity of this mill it may be mentioned that it consumes 300 bales of cotton in a single week, and turns out 25,000,000 yards of manufactured cotton per year. There are 1200 hands employed, more than two-thirds of whom are women, and the spectacle of the crowd which turns out at the noon hour reminds one of a circus day in town or a procession day. While speaking of the employes I may remark that the wages appear to be very good. Twenty five cents a day is the lowest wages paid to the smallest children, but the average of all classes is between $5 and $6 a week, and there are numbers of skilful women who can earn as high as $10.50 per week. The amount of wages depends of course upon the amount and skill of the work done.

The bleaching and starching is carried on in the ground floor. All the work here

IS DONE BY MACHINERY,

from the immersion of the cloth to the folding of it into pieces, and the gumming of the labels and printing of the mill-mark preparatory to shipping to the wholesale houses. The bleaching is admirably done, and the cloth as it falls down in waves from a folder has that delicate tioge of blue-green which pure snow assumes under certain phases of reflected light. In another department there are 5 openers, 9 scutchers, and eleven finishers—machines which prepare the raw cotton for the carding machine. These carders supply the railway heads, drawing frames, slubbing frames, and intermediate and fine roving frames, which prepare the cotton at length for spinning. The work of these machines is more elaborate than a spectator would imagine, since in the process of "doubling" each of these unspun strings are doubled 14,976 times, and some kinds more than that. In this indeed lies the great art of cotton spinning, for the oftener the fine strands are doubled the more even is the thread which is finally turned out from the spindle. There are 66 revolving-top flat cards with "railway" attachments, by which the carded cotton is carried to the machines above mentioned. These cards are used for fine work and the regularity with which the steel comb—moving with the rapidity of the humming bird's wing—picks off the film of cotton is admirable. There are also 150 cards for ordinary work, turning out 120,000 lbs. of carded cotton per week ready for the spinners. There are 40,000 ring spinning spindles (by Howard and Bullooghs, Accrington, Eng.) in one flat, which spin the warp; and in the next are 30,000 mule spindles (by Curtis and Sons, Manchester), on which the filling or weft is spun. All kinds of thread is spun on these machine, from No. 4, which is the coarsest, to No. 40, which is the finest spun in Canada. In another flat are the looms upon which the yarn is woven into cloth, and of these there are 1200. One feature of this department is the looms for weaving grain bags. There are 60 of such looms, and they weave the bags complete and without a seam. They are capable of turning out 2400 bags a day, and it is needless to say a ready market is found for all they can supply. There are a number of looms specially made for

of double the usual width, so that a sheet can be made in one piece. The width of cloth produced by these looms is 72 inches. Some 300 looms are engaged on canton flannels, of which the Hochelaga mills are now making eight or nine varities in both bleached and greys. This is comparatively a new departure in cotton manufacture here, as bleached goods in this line have never yet been produced in Canada. Almost the whole of the Canadian market is supplied by these mills, and the leading merchants to whom samples of the new bleached canton flannels have been sent, have pronounced them superior to anything they have seen in this country. There are now 600 of the looms engaged on bleached goods in general, which may now be said to be a specialty of this mill, and they turn out 120,000 yards a week, making six different qualities. These goods, I am told, are rapidly displacing Horrock's goods and the American cottons from our market. Still another new feature of the Hochelaga mills, is in the manufacture of shoeduck cotton, for the lining of boots and shoes. They now produce 6,000 yards a week, and the material seems to be of a fine quality, both for appearance and strength. Altogether, some are here manufactured. The Hochelaga mills were opened in 1872, when there were only three other cotton mills in Canada—namely, the Merritton mills, the Dundas mills, and the Stormont mills at Cornwall.

To Mr. Morrice, of D. Morrice & Co., the manufacturers agents, and one the principal owners of the mills,—and to Mr. W. J. Whitehead, manager, and James Jackson, superintendent, the press party were indebted for the courtesies shown them during their inspection of the works.

In this connection it may be worth while to mention that not far from these mills in Hochelaga, and also on St. Mary street, is one of the most recently finished of the Canadian cotton factories—namely, the St. Anne mills, which were opened last January. This new mill is excellently planned and well constructed, and turns out an excellent class of grey cotton goods. It employs 500 hands, has a like number of looms, and has 20,000 spindles. It turns out nearly 8,000,000 yards of cotton per year. Messrs. D. Morrice & Co., are the principal owners, and the manufacturers agents of this mill also. From these facts it will be seen that the cotton making industry of Montreal is a very important one, and its establishments take the lead of all Canadian factories of this kind for the variety and probably the quality also of their work.

Common-Sense in Temperance Reform.

An editorial in the September Century discusses "The Temperance Outlook" with the following conclusions: "That the temperance question should be made a political question is most desirable. No question more vitally concerns the whole country with respect to its highest welfare. We should have temperance men in office and temperance laws enacted. But temperance must be temperance. It must be a sensible and practical scheme that sensible and practical men will support which shall bring about the desired reformation. It must be a scheme which the great majority of moral men will recognize to be sound its logic and even in its justice. Anything else than this may, under pressure of an excitement, achieve a temporary success, but only this will be a permanent cure of the rampant abomination. The liquor men are now more defiant and more numerous, in proportion to the population, than in any former period. They work their criminal mills openly in the face of all, and we see the streams of vice and crime pouring forth from these sources to lay waste the community and overwhelm the dykes which philanthropy has erected. The courts, the police, and the public officers generally, seeing the bold mien of these disturbers of the peace, find it easier for their weak natures to humor them and to connive at their wicked works than to oppose them. The great majority of the community are thus oppressed and tyrannized over by his minority, who laugh at law and hound the defenders of law. The only end of this enormity will be in the union of the majority, and this can never be effected by extreme measures or fanatical pronounciamentos. Discrimination between liquors that are hurtful and those that are (in moderate use) healthful; discrimination between modes of drinking, as treating and drinking at meals; discrimination between places for drinking only and places for lunch or dinner; discrimination between drinking on the premises where the liquor is sold and drinking it at home; discrimination between day and night in the sale,—these and other like discriminations are to be made in place of the sweeping demands of the ultra men if a union of the temperance forces is to be consummated. Without this union the evil must go on propagating itself daily, and on the so-called temperance leaders must rest the blame. They have constituted an unreasonable shibboleth. When they abandon that the enemy will be conquered, unless meanwhile the enemy shall have conquered all the ground and made our land a moral desert. Admirable laws, exactly suited to diminish the curse and destroy the political power of the rum interest, have been introduced into the New York Legislature, and would have been enacted but for the solid vote against them of the so-called 'Temperance' constituency at home. This class of reformers will have their zeal intensified by the action of Kansas and Iowa, and they may carry a few more of the States. Would to God their success was really success, that the rum interest were striken to the heart by it! But not until the reaction takes place, and these men are convinced of their error and are ready to build on truth and not on impulse, can we expect the union of all good elements which will finally dig the grave of Rum and bury him beyond all resurrection.'

Satan's Work.

Little Mabel and her mother were boarding during the summer on a farm. About the house were several currant bushes loaded with fruit, of which Mabel was excessively fond, and, despite her mother's repeated injunctions, she would eat the currants until they made her sick. One day her mother caught her in flagrante delictu, and proceeded to try the effects of moral suasion. "Why do you persist, my child," she asked, "in doing what I have so often forbidden?" "Satan tempts me, mamma," replied the precocious offspring, "and I can't help it." "Well," said the mother, "when he tempts you again you must say to him, 'Get thee behind me, Satan,' and then he will leave you alone." The next day Mabel's mother again discovered the little girl in the bushes, and, hastening to her, began to rebuke her for her repeated disobedience. "Mabel," said she to the startled child, "didn't I tell you yesterday to say to Satan, 'Get thee behind me?'" "Yes, mamma," responded Mabel, "and I did, and as I said it Satan got behind me, and pushed me right in!"

The spirit of insurrection is abroad; and riots, more or less political, are of frequent occurrence. Friday last riots took place at Karlstadt and Sussex in Croatia; on Tuesday last a mob paraded the streets at Trieste, crying "Down with Italians and foreigners. Long live Austria." They attacked the Italian gymnasium and newspaper offices. At Agram a mob threatened the railway, the custom house and the Archbishop's palace.

AN ALLIGATOR WOVEN IN FEATHERS.

What a Woman who Lost 17 of her 20 Children Found in her Pillow.

Hundreds of people have visited the house of Mrs. John Smith, on McLane avenue, Pittsburg, attracted by stories of witchcraft in connection with the death of a number of her children. Mrs. Smith, a woman of fair intelligence, tells the following remarkable story, which is vouched for by her neighbors:

"I have been married for nineteen years, and in that time have become the mother of twenty children. Of the twenty only three are now living, the births and the deaths having averaged one a year. The last death occurred a few weeks ago, the child being an infant. A week or so ago a neighbor, Mr. Caffrey, who had been sick for some time, found a curious formation of flowers, roses and crosses in the pillow of his bed, made of feathers. After finding them he became better. I came home and looked through my pillows and feather beds. My husband had been ailing for some time, and in his pillow I found an alligator woven out of feathers. It was about fifteen inches long and two inches wide, and the feathers were so tightly woven that I could hardly pull them out. I did not know what to make of it, and asked some of the neighbors. They said it was the work of a witch. I kept the curious pieces of feather work for a day or two, until I became annoyed by the hundreds of people who called to see it. Some wanted to buy it. I burned the alligator, with all my bedding, yesterday. I don't know whether to account for the death of my seventeen children through this evil influence or not, but I think there is something in it.

The superstitious are all agog over the development. There are not less than three witch doctors in this city who practice strange mummeries, and they have a large practice. Strange to say half a dozen similar cases have occurred in the last six months, one case resulting in a suit in court. The story of the Smith woman regarding her numerous and fated progeny is as much a novelty as the witchcraft story she tells.

Vera Sassulitch.

Vera Sassulitch was born in 1850, according to the (apparent) most trustworthy authorities, and in 1867 was shut up in a Lithuanian prison for the offence of being a schoolmate of the sister of Netchieff, the political conspirator. Her imprisonment lasted two years, and she had scarcely been liberated when she was re-arrested on an administrative order of exile, and hurried away from her mother's house so rapidly that she would have perished of cold but for the compassion of a gendarme, who covered her with his cloak. For some years she was passed on from town to town as a "suspect," until, having spent the best years of her life in prison, a victim to the

INSOLENCE AND BRUTALITY OF THE POLICE,

she had learned to pity those who were similarly afflicted, and to desire to avenge them. In 1878 she learned of the brutal ill-treatment of a prisoner, Bogoluboff, by General Trepoff, "prefect of the town," at St. Petersburg. The general had entered the fortress and was exasperated on beholding Bogoluboff and a companion walking together and conversing, as, not being convicts, but merely accused men detained on suspicion, they had a right to do. To a harsh question as to why this was allowed, one of the two volunteered an explanation. "I do not address you—to your dungeon!" shouted the general furiously. The two prisoners walked on quietly, when Trepoff, crying "Hats off!" aimed a deadly blow at Bogoluboff. The prisoner's hat fell off, but Bogoluboff picked it up and put it on, whereupon the general

ORDERED HIM TO BE FLOGGED.

A romatic version made it seem that Vera Sassulitch had been acquainted with Bogoluboff—had even been his mistress—but there was no truth in the story. She read with indignation of the outrage, and waited some time to see if the Government would pay any attention to it. When no action was taken, she resolved to do vengeance herself, and on the 5th of February, 1876, went to the general's reception-room with a petition, and when he stretched out his hand to receive it, shot him through the body. She made no effort to escape, and said that she had fired upon the general premeditatedly, without caring whether she killed him or merely wounded him, since in the latter case her end would be attained of calling attention to his brutality. She was brought to trial in April, 1878, and defended by M. Alexandroff. The jury selected was composed of six members of the Civil Service, two merchants and a nobleman, a school inspector, a student and an artist, and it acquitted her promptly, amid the applause of the audience, despite the evidence, her avowal, and the speeches of the judge and the prosecutor. The

from the press throughout Russia. On the 3rd of July, 1878, Vera Sassulitch appeared at Geneva, where she was received in triumph by Rochefort and his friends. She gave out that she had been re-arrested but permitted to escape. It was reported for some time that the Vera of Geneva was an imposter, and that the Russian Charlotte Corday was really in Siberia, but finally all doubts as to her identity ceased. In December, 1879, she published a statement to the effect that her attempt on the General's life had been made in pursuance of orders from the Revolutionary Committee, and that she had been designated by lot as the avenger. In February, 1880, her arrest was said to have been effected in St. Petersburg, but the report proved false, and she was repeatedly heard of thereafter at Geneva and Paris, pushing on the Nihilist propaganda, and active as one of the editors of the Narodoa-Volia, a well-known Nihilist review.

He who receives a good turn should never forget it: he who does one should never remember it.—Chanon.

The Spanish troops cannot be very expert marksmen, judging from the manner in which they managed to slaughter, at a few paces distance, the unfortunate sergeants who were the other day condemned to death as mutineers. Three volleys, we are told, were required to finish the job, and even then one of the poor wretches raised himself and called for mercy, as the firing squad, deeming its work done, was passing by. The Spanish troops evidently need practice before engaging in a war with any formidable enemy.

Praying against Time.

Talking against time is common in Congress, but praying against time is the device of a clever Brooklyn child, who will know how to get her rights when she comes in sight of them.

The fire burned low in the Franklin stove, the cat was asleep on the rug, and not a mouse stirred behind the wainscot as the mother wrote by a shaded lamp with a noiseless pen. All the house put on slippers of velvet when little Rose went to bed, for sleep and she were enemies, and she fought him to the last eyelash. Her voice came from the bedroom now with no sound of surrender in it. It was better to be at prayer than to be asleep. and of course no one could reprove her for praying.

"O Lord," said she, "make me good, and let me go in the omnibus to see Aunt Margaret and all the aunts and nieces and mothers. Keep me safe for I want to go and see Aunt Margaret, and see what I can see. Don't let it hail, or snow, or rain, for I want to go in the omnibus to see Aunt Margaret very much indeed, and all the aunts and nieces and mothers. Make me well so that I can go in the omnibus; please do. Bless grandpa and grandma, Aunt Kate and Aunt Sophia and Mr. Charles Swan. Bless papa and mamma, and make us all good, so that we can go to heaven at last, for Jesus' sake."

Again a short pause, and then the wide-awake defiant voice went on:

"Keep grandma from dying before she gets here. Don't let anything happen to her. Don't let any bears or wild beasts eat me up. Bless grandpa and grandma and Mr. Charles Swan, and Aunt Katie and Aunt Sophia."

Another pause, a little longer than the first, and the unconquered began again:

"I long for apples. I long for milk. I long for pie. I long to be good. I wish I had not that cold. I long for some water. I long for some wine. I long for some brown bread. I long for some molasses. I long for some white bread. I long to be a woman. I thank Thee that it did not rain or snow. Give me a clean spirit. Let me be good when papa is here, for it grieves him to have me naughty, and he buys me things—playthings. I have prayed that I should go to sleep. That makes three prayers."

A yawn, a long-drawn breath, and then silence presently announced that the last prayer was answered, and sleep reigned.—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for September.

A Fish That Nearly Evaporated.

Maj. Haggerty is a great Waltonian. He was telling a party how he caught a big bass. In the front room he said it weighed four and one-half pounds by the watch. In the ante-room the bass weighed four pounds. Meeting another group of friends on the staircase he told of his capture.

"I'll swear, gentlemen," he averred, earnestly, "it weighed three and one-half pounds if it was an ounce."

"Stay, Major," said the Colone', "don't go down stairs just yet."

"Why?"

"Oh, because I'm afraid that by the time you reach the sidewalk that bass will be evaporated altogether."—New York Star.

Terrible Superstition.

No one of the horrors which occasionally crop out in the interior of New Jersey has been more wrapt in mystery than the cremation of a woman and her two children recently at Estelville, six miles below May's Landing, the county seat of Atlanta county, and eighteen miles from Atlanta City, N J. The facts became known at the railway station May's Landing, thirty-six hours after the tragedy had occurred. It took place in a settlement of thirty-seven families of Russian Jews, who were colonized at Estelville a year ago by General Burbridge. From midnight Friday until Sunday morning the tortures of the mother and her daughter seemed to have been hushed up amongst these people. On Sunday morning a group of them appeared at the depot with a waggon, in which lay the woman and the girl. Both were burned almost into unconsciousness, and it was developed that the purpose of their compatriots was to take them to a Philadelphia hospital, although none of the party could or would speak English. It finally transpired that on Friday at midnight had been heard from the small cabin occupied by the wife and children, Ivan Nilotowski, the husband, had either deserted his family, or wandered away in search of work. The cabin was found in flames, the six-year old boy burned to an armless legless trunk, the mother rolling in agony in the sand, the eight-year-old-daughter crisped to unconsciousness. The mother was a beautiful young Jewess 23 years of age. Her long black hair was singed over her shoulders, her eyes fixed in mad delirium. She would say nothing of the cause of the fire. The neighbors can't or will give no explanation. There are Russian Jews from this colony now begging through this vicinity. Their silence is, in some cases, more that of cunning than stupidity. One of them hints that the woman sacrificed herself, while another intimates that her neighbors were unfriendly. It seems that the people are many of them given over to degrading superstitions. Their belief in witches closely resembles the voudooism of the African blacks. Mrs. Nilotowski was by hunger and thirst. She did not make her wants known to the outside inhabitants of Estelville, many of whom are humane and intelligent people, that being a very old Jersey settlement. The last sacrifice to the demand of superstition, the phantom of hunger and desolation, Nilotowski's serf ancestors had worshipped on the Russian steppes, was the cremation of the wretched victims. During Saturday night the same dreadful silence was preserved by the mother. After lying on the hard bench in the railway station for seven hours, Sunday morning the little girl's tortured life went out. The mother was removed to the house of a man named Smith Spence, where she lies at the point of death. All efforts to draw from her any solution of the shadow overhanging the midnight burning seems unavailing, This Gen. Burbridge is said to be the one whose refusal of a Southerner's challenge in Washington about a year ago excited such favorable newspaper comment. The colonists seem shiftless and densely stupid.

AWFUL SHRIEKS

A Terrible Ride.

At Royon on Gironde there was recently a scene perhaps unprecedented in the annals of ballooning. M. Gratien, a well-known aeronaut, was about to make his accent in a hot air balloon, called La Vidouvillaiso. Mlle. Albertine, heroine of several balloon accents, was seated in the car, and M. Gratine was holding in his right hand a loose coil tied to one of the cords that served to attach the balloon. The balloon unexpectedly broke loose, and the cord unrolling itself with lightning rapidity caught in a sort of knot around the first and second fingers of Gratien's right hannd, and he was immediately whisked off into the air 600 metres high. In vain he tried to haul himself up on the cord and loop it over his arm. After frantic efforts he became exhausted and hung at the end of the cords, suspended solely by his two fingers, and suffering excruciating agony, owing to the jerking of the balloon and the cord, which cut like a razor through the flesh to the bone. In that situation Gratien was carried a distance of nearly four miles, at a height of 600 metres above the earth. Mlle. Albertine, overcome by the horror of the situation, fainted away, and sank helpless to the bottom of the car. As the air in the balloon became cool the balloon descended, bumped against the earth in the midst of a dense mass of thorny shrubbery. Gratien was not only stripped of his clothes, but his skin was literally torn in stripes from his body, as he was dragged for half a mile through thorny brambles. Finally, some peasants managed to cut the cord. Gratien appeared to be a mass of wounds, and to be near bleeding to death. Strange to say he did not loose consciousness for a single instant. He suffered no internal injury, and although his condition is critical, he will probably recover. When the rope was cut and the balloon was freed from the weight of Gratien's body, it again rose in the air, carrying off Mlle. Albertine. By singular good fortune it soon landed in a marsh, and mademoiselle at last stood on terra firma. She was sorely distressed in mind, and badly scared. but otherwise safe and sound.

A Reporter's Strange Position.

President Rutter of the New York Central Railroad, is a spare, sparrowy sort of man, with large eyes which lie outward as if they took in too much of the world to be satisfied in their cavities. Referring to the press and interviewing, he remarked to me recently, concerning a journal which is always saying that it "submits every interview," etc., etc.' as follows: "I was coming home at a late hour not long ago with my wife, and had just descended from my carriage and got to the foot of my steps, when a man bounded up there in the darkness, and made me think he was an assassin. I was actually going to strike him with the butt of my whip. Said he: 'I am the reporter of the——. I have been waiting here since dark. I did not want to come but they sent me back three times. You can appreciate my position!' I did feel for him, sent upon such an errand, and so sincerely ashamed of doing it. So I said: 'You are not to blame.' To relieve you of your embarrassment I will submit to the infliction. Come in!'"

A Prussian law requires "peddlers to behave politely, clean their boots on entering a house, and bow when offering wares."

According to a German legend, from the grave of one unjustly executed lilies spring as a token of his innocence, and that from a maiden three lilies, which no one save her lover may gather.

Philadelphia has a dog that eats ice-cream. It is a Skye-terrier belonging to a police sergeant, who shares his cream with his pet, of which he is very proud. He exhibited her accomplishments the other day, remarking: "She knows when its her turn. You can't fool her. Watch." The sergeant took a spoonful himself and threw another on the floor. The morsel had hardly touched the wood before it was snatched up. One spoonful for the sergeant and one for Nell was the order, until the sergeant purposely missed count, and then the beast set up a hideous barking as a reminder.

Saxony has some very queer laws concerning servant girls. For instance, the mistress is required to allow the servant one pound of coffee per month, or the equivalent in money. If the servant furnish her own bedding she receives one and one-half cents per night for so doing. Seventy-five cents per month is allowed the servant for her washing, and she receives five per cent. on all the purchases she makes. She must give a month's notice before leaving her place, and must keep a book for recommendations, in which, upon leaving her place, her mistress is compelled to state the cause of the servant's leaving, and also what is her character.

The most humble of the civil functionaries of the French Republic are the naval cats. There are some hundreds of them, and their importance is duly recognized by the State, which supports them. The French naval cat enters the service in his kittenhood, and spends the first year or two of his active career on board a man of war, where he is berthed in the hold and permitted to devour whatever he can reach. Having thus passed through apprenticeship he is sent ashore and quartered at one of the five naval ports as a terror to the rats and mice that swarm in the victualling yards and store sheds. He is then entitled to an allowance of five centimes a day, and this is regularly paid on his behalf to the director of cats, who lays it out in horse flesh for the use of his forces.

The Fort Smith New Era says:—A very intelligent and well dressed colored man created a sensation on the street recently. He hails from Logan county, where he has been residing for twenty odd years. His parents were both full-blooded Africans, and himself was once as black as a crow, as he expressed himself to us. But now he has a beautiful white epidermis all over his body, except his face which has a mottled appearance, being yet full of the small black spots surrounded by a white skin. This discoloration or shedding of the black skin has been going on for many years, and before long the man expects to be as white as any Caucassian. His hair, however, remains full African. He turned up the sleeves of his shirt and showed us as delicately white an arm, with the blue veins underneath, as any Caucasian can show.

A French paper has discovered the following prophecies in Nostradamus: "In the year 1883 the country of France will see a number of men die who have exercised influence on its destiny. From the first month to the last the inhabitants will be surprised by some fatal news. Towards the middle of the year will expire the last descendant of a dynasty which will have ruled France for several centuries. This Prince will die in a foreign land and his death will be concealed three days. Shortly after the death of that prince one of the last survivors of the Corsican family will seek to reign in the capital. He will assemble his partisans and march on Paris as their head. The Parisians will go forth to meet the pretender. There will be a battle and great slaughter, and the pretender will be killed before arriving at the gates of Paris."

High Life as Represented by Strolling Players.

One morning not long since a gentleman in Wales walked down to the boundary of his park, and found some strolling players acting a blood-curdling tragedy in vans, with a most lavish display of pasteboard coronets, tinsel, cotton velvet, and imitation ermine. He was just in time to catch the following, which will be recognized at once by any one who has ever been in England as the natural expression of the higher classes:

First Lord (loquitur). Me Lord Marmadooke Plantagenoot is wownded.

Second Lord. Not mortually so, I 'ope!

First Lord. Apparently not.

Second Lord. Then leave me for a hour.

About Water.

A curious fact about water is that it is the rust of the metal known as hydrogenium. When oxygen combines with iron it forms a reddish rust, and the metal becomes in time disintegrated. In this condition it is said to be oxidized. Now, water is simply oxidized hydrogenium. The metal is present in the sun and all the planets in enormoms quantities. Indeed it is said that the human body is composed of 5½ pails of water, mingled with some lime, iron, and certain salts. Chemistry has revealed to us many marvels, but none greater than the composition of common water.—Demorest's Monthly.

The Chinaman appears to have a regular gift for work, and nothing can vary it. It was rather comical to see several hundred Celestials building a road of sawdust in Oregon and moving with the same deliberation as if the material had been gravel.

THE FARMERS' CORNER.

Merinos Then and Now.

It is not worth while for us to neglect our Merino flocks, although the Government should admit wool and woollens free. True, indeed, there are parts of the country where wool-growing will not pay, but we may console ourselves with the thought that mutton raising will be remunerative and that the wool of the mutton breeds will help to put the balance on the credit side of the ledger.

England is supposed to import all her fine wools for her famous cloth and other manufactures; nevertheless the writer visited a few years ago, a farmer at Grays, in Essex, and was surprised, and pleased to find in his possession an excellent flock of pure Merino sheep, closely resembling those of the Atwood's of Connecticut, and the Vermont flocks with which he was somewhat familiar. This flock, it seems, came into possession of the proprietor's father directly from George the Fourth, and has since been carefully bred into two or three families without taking any out-cross, and, as was understood, without the introduction of any foreign blood. The flock came originally as a present to the King, when the Prince of Wales, and was bred by him, and increased largely in subsequent years.—American Agriculturist.

Raspberries and Blackberries.

It should be kept in mind that a stem of raspberry or blackberry, that has once borne a crop of fruit, has served its purpose, and will die. These stems will be replaced by a new growth, which will perfect itself this autumn, and be ready to produce a crop of fruit next summer. Therefore it is better to get the old stems out of the way as soon as the fruit is off. More new shoots, or suckers than are needed will grow. Two, or at most three, are all that are required to a stool; all beyond these should be cut away as if they were weeds. Those that are allowed to grow, should be tied up to stakes or trellis, as soon as large enough. Their upward growth should be stopped by pinching the growing point, at five feet for blackberries and three for raspberries.

Not too Late for a Crop.

A most useful crop of turnips has been raised by sowing the seed even as late as the middle of September. Land that has been well manured for early potatoes, sweet corn, or other crop, may give a heavy yield of turnips. For late sowing, the Red-top Strap-leaf is the best. There may be conditions in which it is advisable to sow broadcast, but, as a rule, it is vastly better to drill in the seed. Sheep raisers will find it profitable, even if they must sow broadcast, and allow the sheep to harvest the crop themselves. Those who have a near market can more profitably dispose of the crop.

The Late Weeds.

It has been stated that celery and several other crops of the garden, find this and the next month most favorable for their growth. The warm days, followed by cool nights, with abundant dews, bring them along at a rapid rate. The conditions most favorable for our crops are equally so for the weeds, especially those like Purslane, belonging to warm countries. "Pussley," as it is usually called, how it does grow! We have no need to cultivate it, as is done in France. If it were only marketable, what crops could be supplied! A number of our weeds, though annuals, spring from the seed in autumn, and make compact, sturdy little plants. These pass the winter safely, and are ready to start into growth in the first warm days of spring. Shepherd's Purse is an example of this set of weeds, and it has a number of fellows. Chickweed, especially in damp soils, grows the more rampantly the cooler the weather, and goes into winter quarters a stout plant, ready to bloom as any time in the winter when the snow melts away, and will scatter its seeds in early spring. It is a mistake to stop the hoe and cultivator when the conspicuous summer weeds are subdued. The seedling weeds, in their state of rest, are not conspicuous, but they should be destroyed. They will appear in full force next spring, when there will be less time for disposing of them than now.—American Agriculturist.

Planting Onions in Autumn.

It is much better to plant onion sets in the fall than to wait until spring. Aside from the gain of time by doing it in autumn, the risk of keeping them in good condition is avoided. They should not be planted until next month, or until so late that the tops will not start into growth. At this season the soil is warm and mellow, and the work can be done with much more comfort than in spring. The sets will commence their growth very early, and be much in advance of those planted in the spring. Those who wish to raise their own onion seed, should select the bulbs and plant them out in autumn, taking care to cover them with at least three inches of soil.

MARKDALE, AUGUST 30TH 1883.

MARKDALE.

The prospects for the growth and prosperity of our village has not been as promising at any period of its short history, as at the present time. When we carefully consider our geographical position, we can see no reason why Markdale should not be a town in the near future, being located 17 miles from Durham and about 25 from Meaford and Thornbury, giving it a district of at least 10 miles on each side, of prosperous Agricultural country, the conclusion will force itself upon every thoughtful citizen that "Markdale must grow."

Then we have the best market in the district, which draws a trade from 15 to 20 miles distant.

Many of our business men are men of capital and enterprise and we are gratified to learn from them that the past year has been very successful, and that the village has done a much larger business than any previous year.

The next question to be considered is, in what way can the continued progress of the place be assured. Two things we require to do, first encourage manufacturing industries in our midst, and second to improve our leading roads.

In what way can this be done, are we as a village, in a position to encourage or assist these much desired objects. We pay our Township rates year by year, and what do we get in return. Those who have seen the bridge just completed at Armstrong's creek, half a mile from the centre of our village, can form some idea of how this place is treated at the hands of the Glenelg Council, a bridge which is a disgrace to the Council, a disgrace to the road commissioner, and also to the village, we believe the worst specimen of bridge we have ever beheld, and that on the most extensively travelled road in the district. We would not expect the Township to spend a large sum in our village, but we certainly are entitled to a respectable and substantial job, instead of the above tumbl down structure. We would strongly urge the advisability of incorporation under the circumstances, there is no hopes of any material improvement on the present state of affairs, besides not being in a position to encourage manufacturing industries in any practical shape. If we wish to see our village progress, it can be done by having good leading roads, and encouraging such enterprises as will make it a business centre, where the farmer can have his grist groound, his wool carded, oats traded for meal, horses shod, tinware sodered, harness repaired, boots soled, watch cleaned, pay his newspaper supscription, &c., &c., all at one trip, however, we claim that incorporation is the first and most important move in the direction of sure progress.

THE LATE STORM.

During the thunder storm on Wednesday the 22nd, the residence of Mr. Frank Thompson, of Artemesia, was struck by lightning and a girl of about 14 years stunned so that she died a few hours afterwards. No other damage was done to house or occupants. During the same storm a man named Leighton, employed by John Brett, near Primrose, was killed by lightning while unloading grain, the barn was saved. A barn belonging to James Stinson, 8th con. of Mulmer, was also struck and burned, it contained a large quantity of fall wheat and barley, loss over $1,500. Many other destructive fires occurred from the same storm.

"IN THE MIDST OF LIFE WE ARE IN DEATH."

The cold hand of death has again visited our village, claiming for its victim one of our most amiable and promising young ladies in the person of Miss. Sarah, third daughter of Wm. Armstrong, Esq., aged 20 yrs., 8 months, 19 days. She was stricken down with inflamation of the bowels, which baffled the skill of the attending physicians, and on Monday evening last, being only seven days from the first synptomb of disease, death ended her sufferings.

Her premature demise has cast a gloom over the village, especially the youth of about her age, among whom she was a general favorite. She was a member of the Methodist Church choir for six years, and will be greatly missed there, but in no place will the vacancy be realized as keenly as at home under the parental roof, where her warm heart and genial disposition were so entwined into the affections of each member of the family as well as her parents, that the trial will indeed be severe. Our warmest sympathy is with them in their present bereavement.

The funeral was the largest we have witnessed in this section. Rev. Mr. Casson preached an able and impressive sermon on the Resurrection of the body. The Choir stand and pulpit were draped in mourning as also the vacant chair, which has been so regularly filled by deceased in the past.

A GREAT DAY AT SHELBURNE.

ANNUAL PIC-NIC OF THE TORONTO, GREY AND BRUCE RAILWAY EMPLOYES.

A special train of twenty-two cars, all crowded with people arrayed in pic-nic attire, left Parkdale early Saturday morning for Shelburne, the occasion being the annual pic-nic of the employes of the Toronto, Grey & Bruce railway. The special followed the regular express and reached Shelburne shortly after 12 o'clock, being about an hour longer in making the 65 miles than it should have been. The visitors found the flourishing little town already thronged with excursionists from Owen Sound and stations South, who together with the large contingent from the Teeswater branch, swelled the number of invaders to nearly six thousand. The employes of the road and their friends never turned out in such strength before, and they received a very hearty and enthusiastic reception from the good folks of Shelburne. An evergreen Arch, decked with flags and colors, was erected at the station, and the main street was hung with streamers of welcome and bunting. A committee of leading citizens, and in fact the residents generally placed themselves at the disposal of the visitors and did all they could to make their brief stay agreeable and pleasant one, which they succeeded in admirably doing. The hotels and private houses afforded ample accommodation for all comers, while numerous picnicing parties found a delightful retreat in Mr. Jelly's beautiful grove. The afternoon was spent in the usual way the railway committee offered substantial prizes for numerous games, which were well contested, while those who did not care for participating in or witnissing such athletic exercise found diversion on the dancing platform or stroling round the shady grounds, an orchestra and three or four bands filling the air with sweet music all the while. There was a strong and keen contest in the tug of war resulting in a victory for the T. G. & B. team. The gathering broke up about six and by eight all the excursionests were on their way home, a little tired of course, but charmed and delighted with their visit. Shelburne was glad to have them there, and they were pleased with Shelburne, which is one of the busiest stations on line, and is rapidly increasing in prosperity and population.—World.

Serious Accident.—On Thursday last as Mrs. G. M. Butchart, her daughter and niece were out for a drive in their phaeton, on the hill to the east of the town, the horse took fright, and a son of Mrs. Butchart's who was driving, being unable to hold him he dashed among a very rocky piece of land near the pleasure ground, where the whole of the occupants were thrown out and all more or less severely injured. Mrs. butchart received a severe cut on the head, and the other two ladies were badly bruised. Fortunately no limbs were broken and we are glad to hear that all are progressing favorably.—O. S. Advertiser.

The formal opening will take place on Sept. 12 by the governor-general and the princess. There is a long list of special attraction, something new and unique for every day. Manager Hill has evidently not spared time or expense in securing the most taking features. One of the many novelties will be the electric railway. The grounds will be open several evenings during the two weeks and they will be brilliantly illuminated with the electric light. Taken all round the exhibition of 1883 will surpass any previous one.

Mr. McGowan will soon be in a position to commence grinding, having the new dam well forward towards completion. His loss has been very serious, having invested some $17,000 in the mill property, and when everything was in Readiness for action, the spring freshet came, bursting the dam, thereby destroying his seasons work, which, together with the cost of repairing the damage, the los would ha crushed many a man, but his financial circumstances were such as to bear him through, and we hope soon to be able to report the mill in operation, and have no doubt he will yet meet with the success and patronage he deserves.

AN ENGAGEMENT.

Norman found Cecily alone in Stella's little sitting-room. It was not a very romantic love-making.

"You know what our grandfather's wishes are, I suppose, Cecily?" were his opening words to her.

"Yes, Norman," answered Cecily with becomingly downcast eyes. She was leaning against the mantle-piece, and her dark, woollen dress was lit up by the flickering firelight. She looked pretty enough to please any man, only that Norman was haunted by a face that was fairer still.

"Do you like me well enough to marry me, Cecily?" he continued, taking her hand gravely.

"I will promise to marry you," she answered, which, had he noticed it, was not quite what he had asked her.

"I think you have a very sweet temper," said this young man, to whom the subject of temper was a monomania. "I am sure you will make a very charming wife."

"Thank you," said Cecily, and there was a flicker of amusement at the corner of her mouth.

Then this strange wooer lifted her hand gravely and respectfully to his lips, and at that Cecily laughed outright; but I don't think she was thinking of Norman Allingham, but of a certain young man who was in the habit of kissing her with less reticence in sundry remote corners of her grandfather's domains. And that was literally the whole story of their engagement.

At that moment the door opened, and Stella entered. The very instant she perceived Norman and her sister standing close together, a sure instinct told her what had happened, even had not Norman instantly stepped forward to meet her.

"Your sister has just promised to marry me, Stella; will you wish me joy?"

And then by the sudden stopping of her pulses, by the wild throb of pain that shot through her heart like the stroke of a knife, Stella knew once and for all the truth to which she had so long wilfully blinded herself. Her anger, her resentment, her displeasure towards this man were all nothing but vain self-delusions! She loved him and she knew it at last.

It took all her courage and all her fortitude to enable her to hide her secret from their eyes, to steady her shaking voice, and to calm her trembling lips while she answered him.

"I wish you joy with all my heart," she managed to answer at length. The words were kind; but the manner was so cold and mechanical, that again Norman misunderstood her, and mistook her self-control for feelingless apathy.

Her turned impatiently from her with a feeling of relief toward Cecily, and drew her affectionately towards him; and Stella, who had not yet schooled herself to the sight of their happiness, turned and fled from the room.

"She does not seem to care," said Norman bitterly, and his breath came quickly as he spoke.

Cecily glanced up at him in some surprise, and then, Cecily not being at all dense of comprehension, she drew her own conclusions.

"It is certainly a very pretty game of cross questions and crooked answers," said this clever young lady to herself; "and I am very glad to think that I am not doing any harm to anybody by it. It will all come right in the end." She spoke these last words unconsciously aloud.

"What will?" asked Norman in some surprise.

"Why, our engagement," answered Cecily, smiling.

Soon after a little incident occurred which gave a fresh and unexpected turn to Norman's thoughts concerning Stella.

One day Norman and Cecily had being going out for a walk; Norman had politely asked Stella if she would not go with them. Stella refused cold and ungraciously, and retired to her little sitting-room, and the lovers had started alone. They had not gone three hundred yards from the door when Cecily discovered that she had forgotten her umbrella, and she asked Norman to go back for it.

"I don't think it will rain," objected Norman.

"Never mind, I am never easy without an umbrella; pray go back and fetch it, you will find it in the morning-room."

Norman, as in duty bound, went back to the house and made straight for Stella's morning-room. What, however, was his astonishment on opening the door, to see Stella herself stretched upon the sofa, face downwards, in an attitude of utter despair, sobbing wildly and passionately.

Norman stood aghast. Stella's grief was so excessive, that she was quite unconscious of his entrance, when suddenly he knelt down by her side and took her hand; she started and sat up, and seemed to be terrified at the sight of him.

"For heaven's sake tell me what is the matter, Stella!" he said, looking himself the picture of distress at the sight of her tear-stained face; "has anything happened?"

"Nothing—nothing whatever; pray leave me."

"My dear Stella, how can I leave you in such trouble—can I not help you?"

"No—nobody can help me, you least of anyone," she said brokenly.

"Why do you say that? is it because you are always hard and angry with me? Surely, now that I am to be your brother-in-law, you might give me a little sisterly gentleness, and trust me a little more."

"Ah! yes, you are to be my brother; I have not forgotten it," she said, more bitterly, perhaps, then she intended.

He looked deeply pained.

"It is not my fault," he said, in a low voice, looking at her meaningly,, "that that is to be the relationship between us."

"Pray do not speak so to me," she answered, trembling violently, and endeavoring to withdraw her hand, which he still held.

He sighed deeply.

"No, it is not right now, I know; but, Stella, I sometimes think that you and I have misunderstood each other throughout."

"What does it signify—it is of no importance," she said hurriedly.

"I should like to understand you better," he said wistfully.

"Pray do not try to do so. What good can it possibly do—now?" The last word was added almost in a whisper—she had not meant to say it, but it had slipped out.

He bent eagerly toward her.

"If you have forgiven me the past—" he began excitedly.

She rose to her feet.

"I never forgive—my temper is too bad," she said quickly, half laughing; "but I don't want to mar your happiness, yours and Cecily's, you know." She paused, looking at him significantly, and Norman hung his head conscience-smitten—he had forgotten Cecily's existence.

"You must forget my foolish tears. I am all right now," she continued lightly. "I was low-spirited—foolish—there was no reasonable cause for them. Now go and find Cecily."

"And we are friends?" he said, moving reluctantly towards the door.

"Yes," and for the first time her bright smile beamed full upon him, as she out her hand to him; "yes, we are friends."

And Norman went slowly away.

"What a mistake I have made!" he said to himself, as he went thoughtfully out in quest of Cecily. "If I had waited, she would have forgiven me—she would even have loved me! Great heavens! what a terrible misfortune has befallen us both!"

Half an hour later he came back alone, and found Stella again where he had left her, dry-eyed this time; but silent and thoughtful. She looked up in surprise as he entered.

"Have you seen Cecily?" he inquired.

"No; has she not been with you?"

"No; I have never been able to find her. I have looked for her everywhere, and shouted for her till I am hoarse—she really might have waited a few minutes for me."

He flung his hat down upon a chair irritably; he looked annoyed and displeased.

"How very strange," said Stella." Where on earth can she be?"

The question was solved at this moment by Cecily's entrance. She came in breathless and rosy, and rated her cousin in no very measured terms for having missed her.

"I have been in the shubbery all the time," she explained, "waiting for you."

"That seems very odd, for I must have passed half a dozen times through the shrubbery, and I never saw you."

"Well, we have lost our walk," said Cecily, unconcernedly; "but it doesn't much signify, only it was stupid to miss each other."

But Stella could not help thinking there was something more than stupidity in it.

CHAPTER XVII.

A STRANGELY-PAIRED COUPLE.

Let me introduce my son to you, Miss Cecily King—Mr. Dyson," said Lady Dyson. Cecily cast down her eyes demurely—Mr. Walter Dyson bowed very low.

The drawing-room at Barfield was full of people. It was the night of what the children had called "the grand party." Mr. King and his three grandchildren were present. Lord and Lady Berryham, who were the chief county magnates; two or three squires and squiresses; a couple of clergymen and their womankind, and, of course, Lady Honoria, who was still staying in the house.

"This is the funniest thing that has ever happened to me in the course of my whole life," whispered Cecily to her partner, as she passed her hand under his arm.

"Funny, do you call it? Well, it's not my idea of fun," retorted Walter Dyson, savagely; "here have I been for the last ten minutes, obliged to stand and listen to that old curmudgeon of a grandfather of yours, telling me the whole history of your engagement to Mr. Norman Allingham. I had actually to congratulate him!"

Cecily burst out laughing.

"I should have thought you would have been intensely amused."

"Amused!" Fancy a man having to offer congratulations about the engagement of his own wi—"

"For heaven's sake, hush!" interrupted Cecily. looking round apprehensively. The guests were just sitting down to their places at the dinner-table.

"Surely," she said, after a minute's pause, during which the rising buzz of conversation again made confidence possible, "surely there can nothing to make you angry, Walter! Remember, 'who wins laughs.'"

"We haven't won yet," replied her companion, sulkily.

"We should never win at all if it were not for me," she answered, rather scornfully.

They ate their soup in silence.

"I suppose," he said presently, "I shall have the extreme amusement and delight of being a witness presently to the love-passages between you and the handsome cousin to whom you are engaged!"

"People don't generally make love in public," answered Cecily carelessly.

"Oh! then, you do it in private! That is your own admission, remember!" he said, suspiciously.

"What an exceedingly disagreeable person you are when you are jealous," said Cecily, quietly, without a trace of irritation. "You were not half so unpleasant in Paris."

"No; because there I had things all my own way," he answered, mollified somewhat by the allusion.

"So you shall have it your own way again some day, you old goose; only you ought to recollect what were my conditions."

"They were uncommonly hard ones, Cecily."

"You agreed to them at the time; and pray don't call me by my Christian name, somebody might hear."

"What am I to call you? Miss King!" And then they both laughed.

"I am sure," said Walter Dyson, "ever since the evening we arrived, when I dropped you at the Wrexham Gates, I have never had a single quiet hour with you. You must own that it is hard to bear."

"And what about the meetings in damp corners of that horrid wood, where I am always going. You ungrateful man!"

"Yes, and you have one ear and one eye upon the house the whole time, and are hardly capable of listening to a word I say. Why, the other morning, when you ran away from your attendant swain, we could hear him shouting and hollcaing after you the whole time."

"Didn't I give him the slip cleverly?" laughed Cecily. "I wondered how on earth I should get rid of him, and keep my appointment with you; and then I suddenly thought of going out and sending him back to the house for my umbrella. Oh! how I laughed to myself as I ran away to you!"

"Oh! yes, you are clever enough," said the young man, rather ungraciously; "but you know it's not pleasant for me."

"Well, it wouldn't be pleasant for me to starve."

"And how long is the comedy going to last, pray! Your grandfather looks as if he might live ten years."

"I have found out from Mrs. Finch that he has got heart-disease; he sees the doctor on the sly—he might die any day," she said, with hopeful cheerfulness; "at any rate, his will is worth waiting for—it will be thirty thousand pounds I believe."

"You had better take care, you will be getting yourself into some horrid scrape if you don't look out; he will be wanting you to marry this jackanapes soon!"

"As I have no particular fancy for penal servitude, I am not likely to do that," answered Cecily, tranquilly. "By the way," looking round the table, "where is the pretty governess?"

"Oh! not at dinner, of course, but she will appear in the evening. My mother wouldn't even have let her be seen then, only Lady Honoria asked for it."

"I shall see her then. I suppose you amuse yourself by flirting with her?"

"Tit for tat," answered the young man, laughing.

And Cecily was cross with herself for feeling distinctly jealous.

Meanwhile, Lady Honoria sat on Sir Edgar's left hand, the picture of beaming good-nature and happiness. She liked Sir Edgar excessively; he was always courteous and kind to her, and they "got on" together. They had the same tastes, and in a great measure the same notions about things; and Lady Honoria felt a profound respect and admiration for his character. She knew that he was a poor man for his position, but that did not signify to her, because she herself was rich. Altogether, Lady Honoria was so well disposed towards Sir Edgar, that there was no day upon which he might have offered his hand when she would not have been quite prepared to accept it.

She looked thoroughly handsome and happy in her place by his side at the bottom of the table, and there even went through her mind sundry resolves as to the table decorations which she did not quite approve of. All those heavy silver epergnes and dishes should be cleared away, and glass and china should be substituted, and three times as many flowers—some day—when she herself would be in authority in the house. And then she blushed a little at the way in which her thoughts had run ahead towards the future.

After dinner, when the ladies streamed into the drawing-room, Maud, in white muslin and blue ribbons, came jauntily forward to shake hands with her mother's friends, whilst a slight girl, with large timid eyes, rose gently gently in her place behind a distant table, and then, seeing that nobody noticed her, sat down thankfully again in her chair. She wore a black silk dress that had seen better days, and that had never, even at its best, been very good of its kind; but the form which it enclosed could not have been more symmetrically lovely had the gown been of the richest; nor could the soft rounded throat, disclosed by the square-cut bodice, have looked whiter or smoother had it been surrounded with rose-point instead of imitation Valenciennes from the village shop.

Lady Honoria nodded to her pleasantly, and then Stella came to her, and sat by her for some time.

"Yours is the most welcome face I have seen this evening," she said pleasantly.

"You are very kind to me, Miss King," answered Lily, gratefully.

"I wish you wouldn't call me 'Miss King,' Lily, but tell me what you have been doing."

Cecily, from the other side of the room, took in the distant figure of the little governess at once.

"She is certainly very pretty," she said to herself, "even in that guy of a gown. What on earth can make Stella take up with her, I wonder! I dare say she is a designing little thing; but it's pretty sure that Walter will amuse himself by flirting with her."

By and by the gentlemen came in, and some more guests arrived, and there was music in one room and whist in the other.

Lily was not altogether neglected in her corner, for Norman Allingham, who was always kind to anything that was timid and helpless, made a point of going to talk to her. Lady Dyson did not mind that, because he was engaged to his cousin; it was more serious when Walter—who had been talking to Cecily on a distant sofa, until Norman came sauntering up to her with an easy air of proprietorship—thought fit to tranfer his attentions to the governess in her quiet corner, and took the chair by her side, which Norman had just vacated.

Lady Dyeon felt that two grown-up sons Lily Finch in the same house was a greater trial than fell to the lot of most women.

"What a pretty girl your governess is?" at that minute observed Lady Berryham, to whom she was talking, putting up her eyeglass the better to inspect Lily.

"Dear me, yes—that is the worst of her! I wish she wasn't pretty," said poor Lady Dyson, who could hardly conceal her vexation.

"Aha!" laughed Lady Berryham, who was childless, and was more inclined to laugh at, than to sympathize with, the agonies suffered by mothers with marriageable sons and daughters. "Because of the sons you mean? But yours are so well brought up, Lady Dyson; and Sir Edgar is, I suppose, disposed of?"

"Well, not exactly; but I cannot help hoping—"

"Of course everybody can see that is a match!" interrupted Lady Berryham, good-naturedly.

"You ought now to find a wife for your younger son."

Meanwhile, somebody else had noted Walter's attentions to the little governess, and had noted them with growing uneasiness and displeasure.

It was Sir Edgar, who saw how closely his brother had drawn his chair to Lily's, and how painfully crimson her face had become.

He was not long in going to her rescue. With a face white with anger, he bent over the back of his brother's chair, and whispered a few words in his ear. They had the effect of making Walter get up and walk slowly away, with a short, angry laugh; and Lily glanced gratefully into her deliverer's face.

Cecily was crossing the room towards the piano.

"I am glad your brother has turned you out," she said to him viciously, as she passed him.

"You look very pretty when you are jealous. I only talked to her to put your temper up," he answered, laughing carelessly.

"Pooh! that is not true. You would flirt with a beggar-woman if you couldn't get anybody better."

"If she happened to be pretty, I certainly should."

"Very well, then; two can play at that game!" and, with a sign, she beckoned Norman Allingham to her side.

And Walter went away, and sulked by himself in a corner.

CHAPTER XVIII.

CECILY'S SOLITARY WALKS.

Mrs. Finch was too wise a woman to sit down and weep over a lost game. She knew, of course, that Lily had not the faintest chance of captivating Norman Allingham now that he was openly engaged to Cecily, but she did not despair of thwarting the plans of the cross-grained old man, whom, at her heart she hated. Mrs. Finch had begun by disliking Stella; but when she found that it was Cecily, and not her sister, who was to be Norman's wife, she transferred her dislike to her younger sister. She settled in her own mind that she had nothing to fear from Stella.

"He will leave her very little, probably," she said to herself. "The bulk of the money will go to Miss Cecily, unless—"

Mrs. Finch did not finish the question even in her own mind.

She began, however, to watch Cecily in a stealthy and cat-like way. She had managed somehow to find out something about the manner of that young lady's first appearance at Wrexham, and she had heard from her daughter that Mr. Walter Dyson had arrived at Barfield on precisely the same day, and almost precisely the same hour. Mrs. Finch had not been slow in putting two and two together.

"They must have arrived together," said Mrs. Finch to herself; and "heaven only knows where they came from! She must be a thoroughly sly, double-faced creature, not to say worse! Never mind, my fine young lady, you will find there is somebody here who is quite a match for you!"

It was Mrs. Finch's object to find Cecily out and to expose her iniquities, whatever they might be, to her grandfather; and then she reckoned on the old man being so angry with his granddaughters, that he would probably turn them both out of the house—and be so grateful to herself for unveiling the deception that had been practiced upon him, that he would be filled with a proper appreciation of her invaluable services, and put her down in his will for a good fat annuity.

Mrs. Finch thought that if she were to effect the upsetting of Cecily's engagement, Norman's heart might be caught at a rebound, and Lily might just as well be the successful captivator as anybody else.

But then Mrs. Finch, although a clever woman, did not know everything, and there were wheels within wheels, of which she was perfectly ignorant.

Thus, whilst she was dogging Cecily King's footsteps one morning, on one of her mysterious solitary walks among the woods on the far side of the park, Mrs. Finch did not know that Norman and Stella were together wandering up and down a sunny walk of the kitchen garden in a companionship that was daily becoming more precious to both, and yet was as dangerous as it was fascinating.

It must be confessed that Mrs. Finch did not waste her strength on this expedition. When she came to a certain part of the wood, where the trees grew very close together, and the undergrowth was thick and dense, she distinctly heard the voices of two persons, a man and a woman, in earnest conversation.

She tried to advance softly, but not being very young or agile, her foot slipped in clambering over a fallen tree, and the noise of her stumble must have given warning of her approach, for there was a sudden rush, and Mrs. Finch could have vowed that she caught a glimpse of the rapidly-disappearing legs of a man through an opening in the thicket.

The next minute she saw Cecily King coming towards her as coolly as possible, without a trace of agitation or disturbance in her pretty, placid face.

It was Mrs. Finch who turned crimson, and looked covered with confusion at the meeting.

"Dear me, Mrs. Finch!" said Cecily. "What an odd thing to find you wandering about by yourself in the woods so far from the house!"

"I think you might apply the same remark to yourself, Miss Cecily," said Mrs. Finch crossly. "You are walking about in the woods, too—a long way from the house."

"Yes; but then I am young," answered Cecily, with a little impertinent inflection on the last word, which did not, it will be imagined, increase the older lady's friendly feeling towards her; "and I like long walks, because I have been accustomed to a good deal of exercise."

"You are not always alone in your walks," said Mrs, Finch, spitefully.

"Really? You seem to know a great deal about me and my walks!"

"You were not alone just now. I heard the voice of a man talking to you; it is of no use for you to deny it."

"I am not going to deny it. I was talking to one of the wood-cutters five minutes ago; it is very possible what you heard."

[To be continued.]

A Fearful Death.

The horrible death is reported of a [illegible] who, while under the influence of [illegible] sought to sleep off the effects of his [illegible] potations in the belt and boiler house [illegible] Webster and Dustin building, at the [illegible] end of the north canal. The [illegible] man's name was William Gould, [illegible] about 40 years. He was married [illegible] one daughter, but had not dwelt with [illegible] family for years owing to intemperance, but lived a kind of nomadic life, going from one town to another, generally [illegible] places wherein are situated paper and [illegible] board mills. He returned to Lawrence Thursday, and was seen upon the streets [illegible] acquaintances, in an intoxicated condition. Dawson's manufactory is operated night and day, and at eight o'clock Gould entered the works, had some talk with the [illegible] foreman, after which he left by the [illegible] door, from which there is a walk [illegible] passes by the boiler house. [illegible] latter, which is on the west end [illegible] the building, is the main belt by which the mill is operated. It runs [illegible] ontally on the north side, within six [illegible] of a brick wall of a boiler, and, on the [illegible] about the same distance from the side [illegible] brick floor, the belt running through a [illegible] made in the earth below the floor [illegible] The last seen of the man alive was when he left the main room of the factory. He doubtless went into the boiler house with the intention of sleeping there, and in a dazed condition did not notice the [illegible] which was speeding with great velocity, fell upon it, being drawn by it against pulley, where he was held fast. His [illegible] was drawn against a brick siding of the boiler, and when found was nearly severed from the body, the edge of the belt having sawed upon it for nearly four hours. His legs were drawn in the groove below the floor level, and at the knee of the victim between the knee and the thigh of [illegible] the belt had eaten its way to the depth of three or four inches, showing that the man must have suffered terribly before death came to his relief. No one went into the boiler house at the shutting down of speed at midnight, nor until Mr. A. [illegible] did next morning, to oil the shafting, when he discovered the victim of the accident. The body was removed and the police notified, and after the remains were viewed by Medical Examiner Howe, they were delivered at Mayor Breen's undertaking rooms, the man having no relatives here. He had in his possession $20 30, a loaded revolver, seven barrels, and a jack-knife, which are in the possession of the medical examiner, Lawrence (Mass.) American.

What Becomes of Our Bodies.

With a very near approach of truth the human family inhabiting the earth may be estimated at 7,000,000,000; the annual by death is 8,000,000. Now the weight of the animal matter of this immense body into the grave is no less than 634,000,000 and by its decompositions produces 9,000,000,000 cubic feet of gaseous matter. The vegetable production of the earth away from the atmosphere the gases generated, decomposing and assimilating them for their own increase. This cycle of changes has been going on ever since man became an occupier of the earth. He feeds on the lower animals and on the vegetable plants, which in due time become a portion of himself. The lower animals feed upon the herbs and grasses, which, in their turn, become the animal, then, by its death, again pass into the atmosphere and are ready once more to be assimilated by plants, the mineral or bony substance alone remaining where it is deposited, and not even there unless sufficiently deep in the soil to be out of the absorbent reach of the roots of plants or trees. It is not at all difficult to prove that the elements of which the living bodies of the present generation are composed have passed through millions of mutilations, and formed parts of all kinds of animal and vegetable bodies, and consequently it may be said that fractions of the elements of our ancestors form portions of ourselves.

Where are the Men?

Now arises the question, "Where are the male bipeds summer?" Camping out in the mountains, fishing and hunting, on their yacht, or their friends' yacht, anywhere but at a fashionable watering place. They do not mind paying brief visits over Sunday or for a few days, but they find it impossible to rise to the dignity of one's best clothes and best behavior the entire season. They must have some escape bag for the accumulated social bile caused by too much restraint and conventionality during the Winter season, so they betake themselves to the woods and the waves, and revel in suspenderless trousers, starchless shirts, and old shoes, scarcely a thought of the girls they have left behind them. Who can blame them? The average man is not born conventional. A vigorous course of training from his childhood up may bring him to a proper observance of les convenances, but in his heart he hates it; he likes to do what he pleases, when he pleases, and so the watering place belle languishes and wastes her sweetness upon the salty air.

Crime and the Daily Press.

John G. Whittier, the Quaker poet, deplores, in a recent poem, the disposition of the daily press to dwell upon crimes and unnatural occurrences. The journals publish whatever appeals to a morbid appetite, and scarcely a paper that comes into our homes but contains items of news such as no parent would care to show his children. Unfortunately, it is unusual occurrences which the public taste craves. Hence the prominence given to murders, thefts, scandals, reports of evil deeds. The more enterprising the journal the more of these objectionable stories does it contain. Still it must be admitted that the newspapers might be much worse than they are. The proprietors and editors are generally heads of families, and much of the more reprehensible [illegible] vicious occurrences are modified or suppressed outright. Then the newspaper is beginning to add to its departments and features more serious matter. The Sunday editions of the large city journals have become [illegible] ly magazines and draw largely from current literature to add to the attractions of their columns. There ought to be a public sentiment which would strongly condemn such journals as make a specialty of evil news.

Dueling, Past and Present

Twenty-five years ago, at the table of a gentleman whose father had fallen in a duel, the conversation fell upon dueling, and after it had proceeded some time the host remarked, emphatically, that there were occasions when it was a man's solemn duty to fight. The personal reference was too significant to permit further insistence at that table that dueling was criminal folly, and the subject of conversation was changed.

The host, however, had only reiterated the familiar view of General Hamilton. His plea was, that in the state of public opinion at the time when Burr challenged him, to refuse to fight under the circumstances which by the "code of honor" authorized a challenge, was to accept a brand of cowardice and a want of gentlemanly feeling, which would banish him to a moral and social Coventry, and throw a cloud of discredit upon his family. So Hamilton, one of the bravest men and one of the acutest intellects of his time, permitted a worthless fellow to murder him. Yet there is no doubt that he stated accurately the general feeling of the social circle in which he lived. There was probably not a conspicuous member of that society who was of military antecedents who would not have challenged any man who had said of him what Hamilton had said of Burr. Hamilton disdained explanation or recantation, and the result was accepted as tragical, but in a certain sense inevitable.

Yet that result aroused public sentiment to the atrocity of this barbarous survival of the ordeal of private battle. That one of the most justly renowned of public men, of unsurpassed ability, should be shot to death like a mad dog, because he had expressed the general feeling about an unprincipled schemer, was an exasperating public mistortune. But that he should have been murdered in deference to a practice which was approved in the best society, yet which placed every other valuable life at the mercy of any wily vagabond, was a public peril. From that day to this there has been no duel which could be said to have commanded sympathy or approval. From the bright June morning, eighty years ago, when Hamilton fell at Weehawken, to the June of this year, when two foolish men shot at each other in Virginia, there has been a steady and complete change of public opinion, and the performance this year was received with almost universal contempt, and with indignant censure of a dilatory police.

The most celebrated duel in this country since that of Hamilton and Burr was the encounter between Commodores Decatur and Barron, in 1820, near Washington, in which Decatur, like Hamilton, was mortally wounded, and likewise lived but a few hours. The quarrel was one of professional as Burr's of political jealousy. But as the only conceivable advantage of the Hamilton duel lay in its arousing the public mind to the barbarity of duelling, the only gain from the Decatur duel was that it confirmed this conviction. In both instances there was an unmistakable shock to the country and infinite domestic anguish. Nothing else was achieved. Noither general manners nor morals were improved, nor was the fame of either combatant heightened, nor public confidence in the men or admiration of their public services increased. In both cases it was a calamity alleviated solely by the resolution which it awakened that such calamities should not occur again.

Such a resolution, indeed, could not at once prevail, and eighteen years after Decatur was killed, Jonathan Cilley, of Maine, was killed in a duel at Washington by William J. Graves, of Kentucky. This event occurred forty-five years ago, but the outcry with which it was received even at that time—one of the newspaper moralists lapsing into rhyme as he deplored the cruel custom which led excellent men to the fatal field—and the practical disappearance of Mr. Graves from public life showed how deep and strong was the public condemnation, and how radically the general view of the duel was changed.

Even in the burning height of the political and sectional animosity of 1856, when Brooks had assaulted Charles Sumner, the challenge of Brooks by some of Sumner's friends met with little public sympathy. During the excitement the Easy Chair met the late Count Gurowski, who was a constant friend of Mr. Sumner, but an old-world man, with all the hereditary social prejudices of the old world. The Count was furious that such a dastardly blow had not been avenged. "Has he no friends?" he exclaimed. "Is there no honor left in your country?" And, as if he would burst with indignant impatience, he shook both his fists in the air and thundered out, "Good God! will not somebody challenge any body?"

No, that time is passed. The elderly club dude may lament the decay of the good old code of honor—a word of which he has a very ludicrous conception—as Major Pendennis, when he pulled off his wig, and took out his false teeth, and removed the padded calves of his legs, used to hope that the world was not sinking into shams in its old age. Quarreling editors may win a morning's notoriety by stealing to the field, furnishing a paragraph to the reporters, and running away from the police. But they gain only the unsavory notoriety of the man in a curled wig and flowered waistcoat and huge flat coat of the last century who used to parade Broadway. The costume was merely an advertisement, and of very contemptible wares. The man who fights a duel to day excites but one comment. Should he escape, he is ridiculous. Should he fall, the common opinion of enlightened mankind writes upon his head stone, "He died as the fool dieth."—George William Curtis, in Harper's Magazine for September.

A Boy's Advice.

The young man who is sparking Lizzie is left alone in the parlor for a few minutes with the pet of the family. Pet regards him steadfastly for a long minute and then asks:

"Are you going to school this winter?"

"School? No, sonny, my school days are over."

"Well, I wouldn't go if I were you."

"Wouldn't you? And why?"

"'Cause I heard ma say you'd never be hung for your smartness, and if you get to know much it may kill you!"

HOW A BANK TELLER GOT RICH.

Making Fifty Thousand Dollars Without Robbing the Bank.

An interesting story is told of the way in which a paying teller of one of the city banks of a shrewd and provident turn of mind, was able to acquire a competency in a short space of time and then retire from his position without the bank being any the loser by the operation and without having his own reputation blasted. The story is that the bank carried a heavy cash balance to meet such calls as might be made upon it from day to day, and to draw upon in case of a run upon the bank. This was entrusted to the paying teller. Instead of allowing this sum to remain in the bank's safe, as was the intention of the directors, and as they supposed to be actually the case, the teller invested largely in six per cent. bonds and an early issue in the government four per cents. Those were substituted for the cash, the investor cutting off the coupons and getting the money on them as they became payable. The prospective calls upon the cash could be readily estimated, and anything beyond that limit was converted into bonds. This state of affairs went along smoothly for about two years, the enterprising teller enjoying all the privileges as to coupons of a bloated landholder.

Shortly after the Oby Owen defalcations became public the directors had a sudden spasm of vigilance, and one day, without a moment's warning, they called upon the teller for his keys and were about to institute a count of cash. With an assurance and nerve that struck the investigation directors speechless, he said:—"Gentlemen, you cannot have the keys. I will give you my written resignation, according to the terms of our contract, but you shall not have the keys to the safe."

The gentlemen were taken completely by surprise, and knew not what to say or do. Arrest was threatened, but the teller was obdurate, and the directors finally withdrew to talk the matter over. This gave him his chance, and slipping out with the surreptitiously purchased bonds, he speedily converted them into cash and the right amount was deposited in the vaults. By that time the objection to the surrender of the keys was removed, and the directors and bondsmen, who had been thoroughly non-plussed and thoroughly frightened by the refusal, found their heaped up thousands secure, and the bank on as sound financial bed-rock as it had ever been. The fact that the teller had just disposed of a large amount of bonds, however, led to the discovery of the way in which he had been using the funds of the bank for his own emolument, and the resignation went into effect. During the time between the purchase and sale of the bonds, they had largely appreciated in value, so that during the transaction the teller had cleared between $50,000 and $60,000 from the rise in value and the coupons. The bank was none the poorer from the operation, and attempts made to compel the employe to disgorge his profits were unavailing. Public prosecution would have given the affair unpleasant notoriety for both parties, and the story has consequently been closely kept.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Occupations for Women.

Says the "Easy Chair" in Harper's for August: Forty-three or forty-five years ago Miss Harriet Martineau is reported to have said, that in Massachusetts, one of the most highly civilized and most advanced communities in the world, there were but seven industries open to women who wanted to work. They might keep boarders, or set type, or teach needlework, or tend looms in cotton-mills, or fold and stitch in bookbinderies. This statement was rather too definite, because there were other fields of labor open to them, especially those of the needle. But there is no doubt that the opportunities for self-support for women by honest industry in some other way than that of domestic service were very few and very limited. The tendency of society under the exclusive control of men has been to restrict unmarried women to the lowest kind of drudgery or to the highest forms of luxurious idleness. There has been extreme impatience of all efforts for the "emancipation of women." But the most resolutely contemptuous sneerer at strong-minded women, and the most doughty foe of the cry of women's rights, as if it were the slogan of the destruction of the essential feminine charm—a kind of war upon nature itself—must admit that, whether the discussion be regarded as a cause or a mere unhandsome phenomenon of progress due to other causes, it is during this discussion that the opportunities of women have greatly enlarged, and the general views of the relation of women to society have greatly changed.

In the State of Massachusetts, which was the scene of Miss Martineau's reputed observation, it is now announced that there are 284 occupations open to women, instead of 7, and that 251,158 women are earning their living in these occupations, receiving from $159 to $3,000 each year. This computation does not include amateurs, or mothers and daughters in the household, and of course excludes domestic service.

SPRINGFIELD, PRINCE GEORGE'S CO., MD. Mr. Chas. G. Addison, of the above place states: "I sprained my right knee causing intense suffering, and the use of crutches for several weeks. I found no relief in other remedies and finally tried the miracle of cure St. Jacobs Oil. In a short time I could bend my knee—which had been as stiff as an iron-rod,—laying aside my crutches and was able to walk as well as ever."

The antidote is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—an unfailing remedy for Colic, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum and all Summer Complaints. (30)

At a public meeting lately held in England a clergyman said that an invertebrate Christianity and churchmanship always leads to molluscous morality.

VERY HARD INDEED.—There are so many things that appear unnecessary, and which for the life of us we can see neither purpose nor end. It may be corns are just one of the thorns in the flesh the why and the wherefore of which we cannot see. Nevertheless they are of the kind that are easily removed. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor makes short work of them. Try it and see how nicely it coaxes them out. Use none other than Putnam's Corn Extractor. Sold by druggists.

"Ripe gooseberry" is the latest of the new colors, and is supposed to be the shade most fit for the third person whose presence makes a crowd—the chaperone.

From Mr. EDWARD MITCHELL, Manager of the Bank of Commerce, Hamilton, Ont.

Hamilton, January 18th, 1883.

J. N. SUTHERLAND, St. Catharines.

My Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your favor of yesterday's date, asking my experience with regard to RHEUMATINE, and I have no hesitation whatever in pronouncing it a success in my case, and in heartily recommending the remedy to those suffering from Rheumatism. I suffered for months with that trouble in my right arm and shoulder, and often was unable to use my hand, and at night the pain was frequently so great as to render sleep an impossibility. I must confess that I entertained a repugnance to "patent" medicines, but some of my friends persuaded me to try "Rheumatine," and although it may be true that I might have got well without it, one thing I do know, that after taking four bottles the pain took its departure, and I have now the full use of my arm. I heartily wish you unbounded success, as I fully believe your remedy is all that you advertise it to be.

I am, my dear sir, yours most truly,
E. MITCHELL.

CONFIDENTIAL.

THOUSANDS of young Men and Women—married and single—through the effects of vicious youthful habits, or excessive indulgence in later years, have so undermined their general systems as to induce almost every other disease, and the real cause of these troubles being scarcely ever suspected, they are drugged and doctored for everything but the right one. THE JERUSEBIN COMBINATION REMEDY is offered as a speedy and certain cure, as hundreds afflicted with every form of disease have been restored to complete health by its use, after all other remedies failed. The recuperative powers of this medicine are truly astonishing, and, in troubles arising from imprudence, its continued use for a short time changes the languid, debilitated condition, to one of renewed life and vigour. Forwarded to any address, on receipt of price, Two Dollars per package—sufficient for one month's treatment.

SQUEEZING A PRETTY GIRL.

While several young couple were strolling along the walks of Sheridan, Neb., the other evening, one of the ladies felt that she was being squeezed, but she said nothing about it untill she noticed that the gentleman who was walking with her was twirling his cane in the hand she imagined was producing the pleasing sensation around her waist. On investigating the matter she was horrified and her escort terrified to find a large black snake coiled tightly around her. Her "company" wouldn't go within a rod of her, fleeing precipitately when she attempted to approach him. Finally a farmer's boy went to the rescue, and whacked the snake on the head with the but of his whip until it let loose. The reptile was over four feet in length, and had squeezed the girl so tightly that several of her corset staves were broken and it is feared two of her ribs are cracked.

The editor of Truth has been photographing some of the girls he knows, and hear is his picture of one of them :—Letitia has a waist. It is her great point, and she is very proud of it. Well she may be, for it is the result of patient years of pain. She has laid on the shrine of that little waist many precious things—good health, good temper and good spirits. Having sacrificed the first, the two other followed as a matter of course. But then it is such wonderful waist! It cannot measure more than seventeen inches, at the very most. The pressure has made her nose permanently red. Not all the waters of Araby would make that nose white again.

GOLDEN WEDDING.—On the 24th of June, 1880, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Strain, sr., of Artemesia celebrated their golden wedding. They had nine children at that time all living, forty six grand children living, equal numbers male a ndfemale, and one dead. Since the above date four grand children have been added to the number, also three great grand children while there has been three deaths, a daughter, Mrs. Frederick Armstrong and two grand children, a child, of Mr. Wm. Strain, of Flesherton and Sarah, daughter of Mr. Wm. Armstrong of this place whose premature death we noticed last week.

CHOKED HIS WIFE.—On Thursday last Robt. Quigley was brought before the Mayor charged with assaulting his wife and choking her. Robt. admitted the charge and the Mayor who evidently does not share Judge Hughes' opinions, fined him $10 or 30 days, regretting that he could not give the offended 6 years in the Penitentiary with a dose of the lash. The cowardly animal went to gaol, his wife declining to pay the fine.—Collingwood Enterprise.

VENNOR'S ALMANAC FOR 1884.—The Gazette Printing Co., Montreal, have acquired from Mr. Vennor the copyright of his Almanac for next year, and it will be issued by them in October, printed on good paper, and otherwise got up in an attractive from. Mr. Vennor states that the contents will be of unusual interest several new features being added. Booksellers and news agents should send in their orders early, and applications for advertising space for almanacs should be addressed to Mr. Richard White Managing Director, Gazette Printing Co., Montreal.

Some reckless speculator, with more daring than exact knowledge of female characteristics, conceived the idea of having sixteen girls trained to play baseball and attract the public by the novelty of the entertainment. The girls in their fancy costumes, presenting a charming spectacle; but the play was very much below par. It is a well recognized fact that a woman cannot throw a ball straight and unless she can use her apron to catch anything thrown at her she dodges out of the way. As exponents, therefore of the noble game, the fair sixteen cannot be regarded as a success.

The railway passenger rate from Cincinnati to St. Louis has been cut from $10 to $1 50.

MEANDERINGS IN MONTREAL.

The Busy Thoroughfares of the Canadian Metropolis.

(Correspondence Toronto Truth.)

The Ontario Press Association in "doing" Montreal took a drive round Mount Royal, had a steamboat ride up and down the river and had two drives through the city. On the last occasion they not only inspected the Hochelaga Cotton Mills, (an account of which was given last week), but were driven through some of the business thoroughfares. All of the journalists who had never had the opportunity of seeing Montreal were astonished at the evidence of wealth and enterprise which characterize many of the streets devoted to the wholesale trade. And well they might be, for I have the word of almost every American and Canadian visitor that nowhere on the continent of America, except perhaps in Philadelphia, can be seen buildings which so thoroughly combine massiveness and strength with elegance and taste as those wholesale houses in the vicinity of St. Helen, St. Peter, Recollet, Notre Dame and St. James centre. One thing which contributes to this, besides mere wealth, is that nature has given the locality the advantage of stone of an excellent quality and of tints which impart to many of the buildings a fine effect.

As the buildings are massive and grand so is the commercial record of Montreal stately and honorable. The oldest firms in Canada are to be found here, and business seems to be on a generally sound basis, if the people are somewhat conservative in their ways. Montreal is in these respects the London of Canada.

A good many wholesale firms here have houses both in Montreal and Toronto, such for instance as H. & A. Nelson, in fancy goods; Ogilvie & Co., in dry goods; Wm. Darling & Co., in hardware. Happening in the large warerooms of the latter, I learned that this firm was established as long ago as 1839, the business now being carried on as Wm. Darling & Co., St. Sulpice st., Montreal and A & T. J. Darling & Co., Front St., Toronto. The former house does business in Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, and the latter that of Ontario and Manitoba and the North-west. This old firm keep ten travellers on the road and employ some seventy clerks and salesmen. The business extends to every part of the Dominion, and I hear that they contemplate the establishment of a branch house in Birmingham, England, in connection with their business.

In a recent letter in TRUTH I noticed an account of the roller mill process and its developement in Canada. It may be interesting to your readers to know that the thought and skill which have of late years been devoted to the subject of food, have brought out many devices for improved grinding, and the demands of the Canadian market have induced Messrs. Miller Bros. & Mitchell, of this city to go into the manufacture of roller mill machinery. A branch factory of the celebrated "Universal Grinder," made at New York, by Newell & Chapin, has also been established here at 95 St. James st., west This is a home grinding apparatus for grinding grain of all sorts and for lone grinding etc., and on account of its cheapness, simplicity and durability has received the highest medals and honors given to such machines at the exhibitions.

In the paint, oil and cement, as well as in the hardware trade, Montreal leads the Dominion. In the paint line a new manufacture has just been started, which bids fair to create a revolution in the market affecting white lead. This is a new process of making white from zinc instead of the material from which white lead is made. Having some curiosity to see the new product I called at the office of the Messrs. Ramsay, Dods & Co., the well known paint manufacturers, where I was informed that the process—which is protected both in Canada and the United States—was one which was for a long time experimented upon by Mr. Ramsay's uncle, who, after working for years and spending all his means upon it, died without being able to perfect it to profitable manufacture. The patent fell into Mr. Ramsay's hands, and the zinc white, after further experimenting was made to some extent. It was, however, left for Mr. Thomas MacFarlane, the skilful Canadian mineralogist and geologist, to work out the different points in the problem of its successful manufacture. The result is that to day Mr. Ramsay places it upon the market as a paint which has just three times the strength of white lead, is capable of covering three times the surface, is far more adhesive and enduring and does not cost much more than white lead itself. These are great assumptions to put forward against so staple an article as white lead; but the samples of paint sent out have been put to the most exacting tests and its qualities are shown to be remarkable. One common practical test in a white paint is its capacity to overcome any pure color, such for instance, as blue, and the stronger the white the lighter it will turn a given quantity of blue. By this test it appears that if an ounce of white lead mixed in oil will turn blue to a certain lighter shade of blue, one third of an ounce of zinc paint will turn it to the same degree of whiteness Other tests have been applied with equally astonishing results. Old painters who have been accustomed to regard white lead as the ne plus ultra of white paint can scarcely credit the results which are obtainable in the working of this new article. In fact, since they have begun to produce the zinc paint, there has been such an immediate demand for it that they have not been able to fill orders, and are now engaged in putting in new machinery and appliances to cope with their work. At the same time arrangements are being made for its speedy manufacture in the United States. There the demand is larger than here, judging by the fact that one American dealer on testing a sample has ordered 600 tons. At the present time Messrs. Ramsay & Dods have been able to turn out a ton a day, nearly all of which, I believe has to be sent out in samples. The paint is remarkable for its purity of appearance, which to the uninitiated seems the more noticeable from the fact that the article is largely made from scrap zinc, which is of the blackest and dirtiest description when it goes into the furnace. I hope to have an early opportunity of visiting the works and describing the process in detail.

Minnie Palmer is not coming back next season. Her success in England has been so great that she is likely to remain there until 1885.

SCIENCE.

The London Tramway Company has resolved to fit the Meharski air engines to all their cars, thus entirely superseding horse flesh by compressed air.

Beet-root sugar is now admitted to be quite distinct from cane sugar. Its sweetening power is at least 30 per cent. lower, though its polarizing power is greater.

A Washington inventor has patented a telephonic transmitter through which, it is claimed, the voice can be audibly heard in a whisper at 750 miles distance.

Geological examination reveals in the delta of the Mississippi, along a space of 300 miles, 10 distinct forests of buried trees. Bald cypresses with a diameter of 25 feet have been found.

Bleaching agents are usually good disinfectants; that which can so disturb an organic compound as to destroy its color is capable of either arresting or completing the decompositions that produce vile odors and are produced by organic germs or ferments.

At the Physiological Society, Berlin, it was lately stated that instead of the condensed milk, which, owing to its large percentage of sugar, has not kept its place as a food for children, a preparation of milk has lately been imported and introduced into the market from Switzerland. This milk is protected against fermentation and decomposition by previous cooking.

A technical journal gives a simple receipt for preserving silver and plated articles from turning black as they invariably will if not kept constantly in use. The same plan could with advantage be applied, we should think, to any metal subject to change or rust from the action of the atmosphere. Plain collodion—that is, not photographic collodion—is diluted with twice its bulk of spirits of wine, and applied to the surface of the metal with a soft brush. The spirit soon evaporates, leaving an imperceptible and transparent skin, which can when required be removed with hot water.

Nickel, according to Professor Blake of New Haven, is much more widely distributed than is generally supposed, and its economical uses are likely to be greatly enlarged in the future, as its value for many purposes has come to be better known. It is now chiefly used in the manufacture of hollow ware, being readily spun and pressed, while its advantages of lightness, strength and infusibility are apparent. Professor Wharton, of Camden, N. J., has succeeded in making objects of cast nickel, such as door knobs, horse bits, &c. Vessels made of nickle Prof. Blake says, are presumably harmless, as the nickel is not easily attacked by vegetable acids. The experiment has also been tried of feeding a dog on nickel salts and the animal seemed to thrive on them.

An Original Bathing Suit.

The beauties among the women in the boarding houses at Atlantic Highlands, are mainly Jewesses. The belle of them all has a horror of bath houses, but is passionately fond of the water. She tripped down to the bluff yesterday morning in a pretty tight-fitting blue flannel suit. Her bodice front was laced with white tape, ending at white frogs like a chasseur's jacket. Her skirt was plain. Her jet-black hair was short and hung in ringlets over her brow and below her neck.

She shouted to some bathers, "I'll be with you in a jiffy," shot into a bath house and almost instantly tipped out again looking like another person. She had simply discarded her cuffs, collar, skirt, and slippers, and now appeared in bloomer dress, with a skirt to her knees, blue trousers an inch beyond her skirt, and her ebon ringlets hid beneath an oiled silk cap. Her merry laughter rose above the shouts of the other bathers for half an hour after she plunged from the end of the wharf. After that she came and sat among the spectators on the bluff in the sunshine. She took her cap off and twirled it in with one finger.

"I'll tell you how it is," she said to an acquaintance. "This rig is my own invention. It cost me only $13.75 for the making and the goods. I can get you one made for the same money You see this waist is separate, and the trousers and underskirt are made together. I've got nothing else on but my stockings. In half an hour I'll be dry enough to walk home. Then I'll put on my regular skirt, my celluloid collar and cuffs, and my slippers. You can't get a cold or even a chill in salt water. On my way home I can stop and do a little shopping, or even have a mild flirtation. Nobody can tell I've been in bathing, and nobody would dream I'm as wet as a dish rag."

Coated Tongues.

Among the various substances which have been found on the human tongue, as shown by the microscope, are the following: Fibres of wool, linen, and cotton; fibres of spiral vessels; fibres of muscle, in one case eight hours after eating; starch grains; cheese mould; portions of potato skin; scales, moths, etc.; hairs from legs of bees; hairs from legs of spiders; pollen of various flowers; stamens of various flowers; hairs of cats, quite common; hairs of mouse once only; hairs from various leaves; wing of mosquito once; fragments of the leaves of tobacco, of chamomile flowers, etc.

Pearl Fishing in the Gulf of California.

A pearl fishery which is said to be of great promise has been opened up in the Gulf of California. One pearl, taken from the shell of an oyster in December last, is believed to be the largest yet found. It weighs seventy-five carats, and was purchased by a jeweller for $14,000. Another of forty-seven carats has also been found. It is perfect in form and finely tinted, and is valued at $5,000. A third very beautiful pearl of forty carats has been exhibited at La Paz, where a bid of $5,000 for it was declined.—St. Jame's Gazette.

A testimonial to the value of advertising is implied in the petition which the retail merchants of Broadway, St. Louis, will present to the city council. It will ask that the former name of that thoroughfare—Fifth street—be restored for the reason principally, that the storekeepers have extensively advertised their business, and if the new name is allowed to remain they will lose a great dealof their custom.

Mary Anderson has been pronounced in London to be the most classically beautiful woman now upon the stage.

PERSONAL PARAGRAPHS.

Interesting Items About Well-known People.

Dr. Banks, an eminent Dublin physician has declined the distinction of knighthood.

The probable successor of the late Dr. Colenso as Bishop of Natal is Canon Godfrey Pope, of India.

Mr. Barr and Miss Wiley were married the other day in the surf at Ocean City, standing in water to the depth of the bride's shoulders.

Mr. Vanderbilt recently gave one hundred dollars to each of the thirty student waiters at the Glen House, in recognition of their determination of character.

Monsignor Capel says he intends to see American fashionable life at Saratoga and Newport, science and culture in Boston, and primitive and working life in the West.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes has been a regular attendant at King's Chapel, Boston, for many years, one of the few American churches dating back beyond the Revolution.

Miss West, the British Minister's daughter, has a refined order of beauty, accompanied by much sweetness of expression. She remains in Washington with her father.

Monsignor Capel (he requests that his name be pronounced Coy-ple and not Capelle) expresses to a reporter a wish to have been born a Jew, and then to have become a Christian.

Fred Archer, the English jockey, with an income of a quarter of a million a year, and a large invested property, in order to keep his riding weight down has to live principally on tea and toast, with a Seidlitz powder by way of dessert.

Mr. Storey, M. P., who bought the London Echo from Passmore Edwards, M. P., a year ago, and received $25,000 from the vendor in consideration of foregoing the purchase, has now purchased the paper again. The Echo will be conducted by Mr. Storey in conjunction with his numerous country papers.

Cardinal McCloskey has been resting at Atlantic City, where his chief diversion is riding in an open carriage. A corrrespondent describes him as above the medium height, and well proportioned, though uncommonly slight. Clear deep-set eyes burnt with a steady glow under heavy bushy brows. A head, ample and strong, is crowned with beautiful silvery hair. His brow and cheeks have been deeply touched by Time; but among all the lines none are more clearly marked than those of firmness around the mouth. The rather thin lips are mobile, and nothing can be more assuring than the Cardinal's smile.

The Rev. Mr. Mackonochie, the English ritualist, has tried "to prevent religion from degenerating into asceticism" by establishing a weekly dancing class in his parish in London. He professes to have shown that "dancing can be enjoyed without drinking." Every other dance on the programme is a square dance, and every dance is extremely vigorous. Most of the dancers are engaged in large manufactories during the day. On the other hand, the pastor of the Methodist Church at Bridgeville, New York, has declined to receive for the purchase of a bell some money obtained at "sociables" where the young people indulged in dancing.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

Mr. William Davidge, the veteran comedian, expresses the conviction that the stage of to-day represents a development in a downward direction. The reign of "stars," he says, is one bad sign of the times. "A 'star' used to be an actor of celebrity in his or her own country; but now anybody feels at liberty to appear as a 'star,' and to be advertised as 'celebrated,' 'distinguished,' 'unequalled,' and so on. The best theatres would willingly present the best plays, but the public will not support them in so doing. You can't blame the managers for this state of things; the managers take their cue from the public. Formerly it was supposed that to become a successful actor required some natural ability and a good deal of training, but nowadays a fashionable beauty can use the dramatic profession as a short road to wealth. It is surprising how little real acting you see on the stage. Audiences don't seem to care for it any more. As for comedy, if a man blackens his face, wears a high collar, and puts himself through a course of antics, he earns an easy and remunerative reputation. Irving is an excellent actor, no doubt, but a better manager, and he will set his plays superbly. But I don't think his Shakesperian rôles will be successful in this country; the popular ideal has been fixed by Edwin Booth, and Irving's vast deviations from it are not likely to be appreciated."

Mr. Pratt's "Zenobia" was recently presented at New York, and, to judge from what was said of it by the papers, was better received than when given at Chicago. Miss Henninges is very highly praised. The work has been revised somewhat in the light of the experience gained at Chicago, its composer's home, and was probably better done as a whole than it was in Chicago. The Tribune says the composer has "striven with serious purpose and produced a work which deserves respect." The News says "it is not only great as a musical work, but is remarkably strong as a piece of dramatic construction."

Minnie Maddern thinks it very naughty to act on Sunday. We hope she will continue to think so, and refuse under all circumstances to act anywhere on Sundays. Actors and actresses are entitled to a rest as well as any body. Besides, the public wan ts a rest, too. But there's a lot of acting done on Sunday that don't take place in the theatres.

Mme. Modjeska, with her husband, has recently invested some $50,000 in a large ranch in southern California, about fifty miles from Los Angeles, together with the stock to make it useful. The Count has become a naturalized citizen of the United States, and both he and his wife expect to spend their lives in that country.

Miss Bertha Welby will make "Oliver Twist" and "Camile" features of her repertoir during the coming season, in addition to "One Woman's Life," her success of last season.

THE COOK FAMILY MURDERER

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—Frederick Mann, the young Englishman who is charged with the diabolical murder of several members of the Cook family in this province last year, has made several attempts to cheat the executioner by escaping from L'Original jail. His first attempt was nearly successful, as he had scaled the walls surrounding the building, but some boys on the outside commenced stoning the Malefactor, and the noise brought the warden in time to prevent the prisoner making off. The second attempt was also a bold bid for liberty. It appears the warden had gone away for a day, and left a feeble old man to look after the murderer. On the new keeper entering the prisoner's sell the latter saw his opportunity, and got out and locked his attendant in. The incarcerated man called so loudly as to attract the attention of the warden's wife who gave the alarm, which brought the assistance, and made the second trial as unsuccessful as the first. The prisoner occupies his idlness in reading and walking through the corridors and park of the jail, seemingly quite insensible to the peril he is in. His trial will take place in September.

From a correspondent.

A SUCCESS.—We had the privilage this week of witnessing for the first time a self binding reaper, a "Massy Low Down" at work, being on the farm of Mr, Andrew Beattie, Orange Valley. The grain was badly lodged barley yet the machine did its work in an exceedingly satisfactory manner. This improved labor saving machine is a boon to the harvest operations.

The harvest in Cuckoo Valley is about all wound up this week.

THE VOLCANIC ERUPTIONS.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—Despatches from Batavia report that fears of further eruptions in Java have subsided. All efforts are concentrated on the burial of the corpses, which are thickly strewn on the coast. The Vapours issuing from the fissures in the divided Mountains have caused unusually rapid decomposition of exposed parts of the great rocks at the summits of the peaks. A number of them split apart suddenly on Wednesday, releasing tons of depending earth. This caused several huge landslides, carrying destruction and death on the edge of the town of Narra. Fifteen Chinese in a section of the sanitary corps were buried. A vessel which attempted to enter the Straigts of Sunda had a hole stove in ner bow.

BATAVIA, Sept. 1.—The coffee and sugar crops in Bantam have suffered severely from the eruptions and tidal waves. Several Europeans and officials are among the dead and missing.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 2.—It is believed that 100,000 persons perished in North Bantam in the recent calmity. It is also believed that the garrison and Fort Anjer were swept away. An extensive plain of volcanic stone has formed in the sea near Lompong, Sumatra, preventing communication with Telkbelong and south-west Java.

THE HAGUE, Sept. 2.—The Governor General of British India has sent two agents to Bantam to ascertain the extent of the calamlty in Java and the neighboring islands. Ships have sent to warn vessels approaching the Strait of Sunda of the danger of navigation. A committee with the Prince of Orange at its head has been formed here to collect subscriptions toward the relief of the sufferers by the calmity.

WARNING TO FARMERS.—The following from the Chatham Tribune explains how farmers in that section are being tricked by a sharper:—For some weeks past a tall fine looking gentleman may be seen going to and fro hunting up people who had farms to sell something in this way:—You paid him $2 to commence with, he then drew a plan of your farm, takin down the price you want, and so fourth. He then proposed to advertise your farm throughout the United States, Canada and England and find you a buyer if possible, in which case he retains 2½ per cent. of your price and if he gets more he pockets the same, with the percentage. This agreement lasts for twenty years and you cannot sell yousrelf during that time without paying him the 2½ per cent. To our mind people making such argeements as the above are ether born fools or entirely blind.

SERVED HIM RIGHT.—On Wednesday of last week a man named Henry Yeo got a horse and buggy from Paterson's livery stable, to go as far as Kilsyth and return. When he got to Kilsyth, instead of returning he picked up a female companion and drove on through Tara, Invermay, and Arkwright to Southampton. Leaving his companion there he started back and got as far as Tara, when the horse dropped on the street, never having been fed or rested the whole way. He left the horse at Tara to be cared for by a hotelkeeper, and coolly started off by train for Hepworth, not returning here till Friday evening, when he found the Chief wating for him with a warrant. He was brought before the Police Magistrate on Saturday, and sent for six months to the Central Prison, where he will have time to reflect on the proper treatment of horses.—O. S. Times.

The Canada Pacific Railroad is being pushed on with great rapidity. When this year's work is completed only 280 miles of the road will be unfinished. Calgarry is now the westren terminus. From Oak Lake, sixty-five miles west of Winnipeg, to Cal. garry the road cost $100,000.000.

EDUCATION.—The great mistake in the education of girls, and for that matter of boys, is that they master nothing. A little hear and a little there is the plan. The object seems to be to enable the pupil to give a long catalogue of things studied. And for this charlatanism the parents who demand it are chiefly responsible. There are schools which are thorough. It is not for us to point them out, but for parents to be sure that they are not caught with the chaff of an empty pretense. In education, veneering will peel off.

CECILY'S SOLITARY WALKS.

They were walking side by side now in the direction of the park. Cecily was quite cool and self-composed, and unconcerned; Mrs. Finch was trembling with rage and spite. She was, moreover, considerably out of breath with trying to keep up with her companion's pace; for Cecily amused herself by walking fast, and her long steps carried her over the ground faster than Mrs. Finch could, with due regard to dignity, follow her.

"If I were to tell Mr. Allingham the way you spend your mornings, Miss Cecily, you would find yourself in a pretty scrape."

"You are welcome to tell him anything you like. As there is nothing to tell, it will be a pleasant exercise for your inventive genius."

"I could put him up to several things if I chose," said Mrs. Finch, threateningly.

Cecily turned round upon her sharply.

"Good gracious, woman! what are are you harping upon! Do you want me to bribe you?"

"I never was so insulted in my life!" cried out Mrs. Finch, indignantly. "How dare you talk about 'bribing,' and calling me woman, too!"

Cecily laughed.

"Does that offend you? I thought we were all women. Well, I won't say it again if it hurts your feelings. But I will give you a piece of advice, and that is, to mind your own business, and leave me alone."

For Cecily could be bold enough when the instinct of self-preservation was aroused. As to Mrs. Finch, she then and there vowed her destruction.

From that hour she watched Cecily more assiduously than ever. But Cecily had the advantage of knowing it, and she gave up her solitary walks—by daylight, at least—and Mrs. Finch was not able, for all her efforts, to find out anything further against her.

It was some few days later that Mr. King sent one day for his youngest granddaughter into his library.

She found that Norman was with him, and from the young man's disturbed and gloomy face, she knew that Mr. King must have said something unpleasing to him.

Norman cleared his brow with an effort at her entrance, and drew forward a chair for her.

"I have been telling Norman that your wedding day must be settled, my dear," said Mr. King, not unkindly.

Cecily gave an involuntary start; but cast her eyes down meekly, and answered:

"Yes, grandpa."

"I am getting an old man, and I should like to see you settled before I die."

"I am sure I hope that may not be for many a long day, sir," said Norman heartily; whilst Cecily only said again:

"Yes, grandpa."

"Well, well—I don't know; I'm afraid my life is not very good, but still, we never know these things. Shall we make the wedding-day this day month?"

Cecily again murmured "Yes," with dutiful submission; and Mr. King thought in his own mind, that she was stupidest girl he ad ever known.

"There; go then, now, both of you," he said, taking up his book again, and almost turning his back upon her.

When they were outside the door, Cecily turned round to her cousin. He was surprised to see how agitated she had suddenly become.

"I am not going to do it, you know, Norman," she said to him.

"Do what, Cecily?"

"Marry you in a month. My mother has not been dead a year. I could not think of being married yet."

Norman's heart gave a guilty throb of delight.

"I will not urge you to do anything you do not like," he said, not venturing to meet her eyes: "but had you not better go back and tell him so?"

"Who? grandpapa! what is the use of it he would only be angry, and he might alter his will. No, we will let him believe it, and he might die meanwhile, and we could take our time afterwards. I should like to have a gay wedding, you know!" she added, half laughing.

Norman looked up at her puzzled. It came across his mind to wonder if she really wished to be his wife. He supposed she did, else why did she not take this opportunity of breaking it off? He did not like either to hear her speak so about her grandfather; it was almost as if she wished for the old man's death.

"You ought to tell him your objections," he urged; "he will think you have settled it, and he will send out the invitations for the wedding!"

"What fun!" said Cecily, and burst into a fit of uncontrollable laughter, then suddenly a gush of tears filled her eyes, and her voice shook and trembled. "I cannot do it—I cannot do it!" she wailed, wringing her hands, and then suddenly turned and left him.

Norman felt absolutely bewildered; he stood still for a minute, half relieved, half dismayed, and then he moved slowly away, saddened and heavy-hearted, feeling acutely that the whole story of his engagement was a mistake. He neither loved nor understood the woman he was pledged to marry, and, alas! he feared that he both loved and understood the sister who, but for his own folly, might have been his by this time.

* * * * *

Now, there lived in the small neighboring town of Loughton a very clever medical man, who had been long in the habit of attending upon Mr. King, of Wrexham. This gentleman was a bachelor, and lived in a small house on the outskirts of the town, and there was a short cut across the fields, which made it barely a mile distant from Wrexham to a pedestrian.

Late that evening, that is to say about nine o'clock, Dr. Graham, happening to be at home and disengaged, heard the loud ringing of the night bell.

It was such a very common occurrence that he was in no was startled by the loud and noisy peal; somebody, of course, was ill, and had sent for him, he supposed.

"Better send round to the stable, John," he called out to his factotum, who came along the passage outside his sitting-room door at the summons; "I'm sure to be wanted. I'll have the old mare to-night; Thomas can put the saddle on."

John stepped back to the kitchen to send out the necessary order, and Dr. Graham began instinctively getting on his hat and gloves, and reached his thick riding Ulster from its peg behind the door.

Two minutes later John opened the door.

"Well?" said the master.

"I don't think you will be required to go out, sir; somebody wants to speak to you," and to Mr. Graham's intense surprise, a very pretty young lady, with only a light cloak flung over her evening-dress of black gauze, was ushered into the room.

CHAPTER XIX.

HER GRANDFATHER'S LOVE.

Cecily was playing a very difficult game. Like most people who forsake the straight roadway of truth and honesty, and who betake themselves to the tortuous paths of deceitfulness and double dealing, there were times when she was bewildered, even in her own mind, as to the dangers and uncertainties which surrounded her.

No one had seen her slip out of the house after dinner, on her way to Dr. Graham's house, nor did any living soul ever know what it was that the tall young lady in evening dress had to say to the old doctor. In his own mind, although he answered her questions civilly and to the best of his powers—and although he was, even at his discreet years, somewhat impressed by the graceful girl, with her winning manner and her anxious and interested looks — Dr. Graham never quite settled satisfactorily to himself what it was that had made Mr. King's granddaughter pay him the furtive evening visit. He never knew whether the anxiety of affection or the workings of the basest self-interest had prompted her close and searching questions concerning the state of her grandfather's health, and he was a little ashamed afterwards that, being so overcome by the novelty and charm of the situation, he had been taken off his guard, and had answered her questions more fully and more unreservedly than he had felt it quite right to do.

As to Cecily, she went home with glittering eyes, and a smothered excitement of manner, which she had some difficulty in concealing.

Long that night she paced up and down the narrow limits of her little bedchamber, think over what she had determined upon doing.

Once, stopping suddenly short before her dressing-table, she caught sight of her own face in the glass; there was a hard, fixed look of malignant triumph upon it, that involuntarily made her recoil from her own image.

"What am I going to do?" she said, to herself, shudderingly. "What name would any one give this thing I am thinking about?" And then she laughed aloud to herself. "Pooh! what a goose I am! After all, I am doing him no harm! He has heart-disease, the doctor says; at any moment he may drop down dead. He is an old man; he has lived his life; he is quite prepared to die; he will not live a couple of months at the most, in any case—is that my fault?—and a week sooner or a week later, what can it matter in such a case? Dr. Graham said—he said—that any sudden shock—any disappointment — any little trifle to upset him——"

And then she stood still suddenly, and held up both hands to her head, and was silent; for there are some things that are best unwhispered even in the remotest depths of our own hearts. After that Cecily jumped into bed, pulled up the clothes round her head and slept as soundly and as sweetly as any child of three year old. The next best thing for one's peace of mind to having a good conscience is certainly to have none at all.

The next morning Cecily met Norman on the stairs, on her way down to breakfast, and laid a detaining hand upon his arm. she did not notice that there were dark rings round his eyes, and wearied and careworn lines upon his face. Mr. Allingham certainly had slept neither soundly nor sweetly.

But Cecily did not see these tokens of distress in her cousin's countenance, because her own was cast down becomingly and modestly.

"Norman," she said, with a pretty hesitation of manner, "I am sorry for what I said to you yesterday—about—about our marriage."

Norman laid his hand kindly upon hers. His conscience smote him often at times for his coldness of heart to the girl to whom he stood plighted, and who loved him—for of course she loved him!

"My dear," he said, "we all say foolish things at times. Tell me what it is you wish."

"I have been thinking, Norman, that our grandfather has been very good to us; it would be wrong and ungrateful not to do as he wishes; and if—if he has set his heart upon seeing us married soon, why—why——"

She paused, stammering and confused, as was natural and maidenly.

Norman's heart gave a great leap, and then sank down cold and sick within him; but he grasped her hand closely, and spoke out bravely.

"You are quite right; we will do as he wishes. We ought to consider him—it is our duty. You are a good girl, Cecily. I do believe that it will be a real joy to the old man to have this—this matter settled; and Cecily, I give you my word of honor I am not insensible to your sweet, yielding temper, and to the effort you have made to speak this to me It shall be the object of my life," he said, solemnly and earnestly, "to make you a good and devoted husband."

Norman spoke from his heart, gazing fixedly and gravely into her face. Never had he been more in earnest—never had he resolved more determinedly to fulfill to the very last letter the words he was speaking to this girl, whom he believed himself to be unconsciously wronging.

But she should never find it out. Never, he told himself—never as long as life lasted!

Judge, then, of his surprise and bewilderment, when Cecily's only answer was a smile of such intense amusement, that it rippled up uncontrollably all over her face in a mood of suppressed merriment! He dropped her hand, and felt deeply disappointed. He had spoken from the depths of his soul to her, and she seemed to consider it as a good joke! Would he ever understand this girl, or have one sympathy in common with the woman who was to be his wife!

After all, it was Stella, and not Cecily, whose task it was to tell the old man that he was to have his own way about the marriage that was his darling object.

Stella, who stood behind his chair white and fixed, as though she were speaking her own death warrant, and said to him, tremblingly:

"Grandpapa, they have told me to tell you that—that——"

"You are strangely timid, Miss Stella!" said Mr. King, irritably, twisting himself round in his chair to look at her. "What are you stammering and stuttering for? and why do you stand behind me as if I was an ogre? and who are they, pray?"

"How am I to answer three questions at once, grandpapa?" cried Stella, with a touch of her old sanciness, and a little laugh that even to the old man's ears sounded hollow and unreal. He drew her round to the front of his chair, and she knelt down by his side.

"Is it Norman and Cecily whose business you are upon, Stella? I suppose they were afraid to speak themselves."

She rested her elbow on the arm of his chair, and shaded her face with her hand.

"They wished me to tell you—the marriage shall be as soon as you like."

He was silent for half a minute; then he sighed contentedly.

"Thank Heaven!" he murmured, fervently, "I shall see it before I die, and I shall have done justice to your father's child; for I was harsh to him, Stella—very harsh. May Heaven forgive me!"

And then suddenly he took Stella's face between his two hands, and lifted it up, so that she was forced to look at him.

"My little girl, if it could only have been you!" he said, brokenly.

"Oh! don't, grandpapa!" burst with a cry from her white lips, and the sudden pain and anguish in her face smote upon him with all the force of a revelation.

He kissed her hurriedly.

"But you will stay with the old man, won't you, dear?" he said, drawing her tenderly to him. "We will send Finch away—I hate her—and you and I will live together. We will never be parted, Stella—you will never leave me, will you?"

"Never, grandpapa — never!" she answered, impulsively, casting up her arms about his neck, whilst tears that she could not restrain—tears of pent-up misery and despair—burst forth freely at his woods of kindness and affection.

It was a strange thing, this love that had sprung up between the hard-hearted old man, with his crabbed temper and his well-nigh withered heart, and the girl who, so lately a stranger to him, had crept into the emptiness of his loveless old life, softening, and purifying, and melting the frozen current of his soul.

How she had done it was a mystery both to himself and to her. She had never tried to win him; indeed, she had thwarted, unconsciously, his dearest wishes, and yet Cecily, who was about to realize them, was nothing to him, whilst Stella was everything.

"How can any one ever have called grandpapa hard and unkind?" said Stella, to herself. "He has the warmest heart and the tenderest sympathy of any one I ever met."

And Stella, who, poor child! had so little to love, loved her grandfather with her whole heart and soul.

But though he loved Stella the best, Mr. King was not ungrateful to Cecily for her prompt consideration to his wishes.

When he met her at lunch time, he took her hand kindly, and kissed her forehead.

"My dear, I am glad you have consented to let things be as I wish. You know I have set my heart upon this marriage, and you are acting rightly in allowing me to settle the time of it."

Cecily murmured an inarticulate reply: she was rather nervous in her manner, and Mrs. Finch, who was watching her closely, noticed that her hands shook with agitation.

Norman stood by her side and received her grandfather's thanks and good wishes also. Mrs. Finch was certain there was false play somewhere.

"She is playing a double game—I am convinced of it," she said to herself. "Who was it that she met in the Park the other morning? Could it have been Sir Edgar? For I am not such a goose as to suppose it was Norman! I must keep my eye upon you, young lady!"

But aloud Mrs. Finch only said to Cecily, with the sweetest smile, as she took her place at the luncheon-table:

"Let me give you a glass of sherry, dear Miss Cecily, for you look quite overcome; and will you have some chicken or a cutlet?"

"You had better order the invitation cards for the wedding," said Mr. King, cheerily, to her, as he sat down opposite her; "and the wedding breakfast must be thought of. It is to be the 1st of May, Mrs. Finch, so mind you are in time with the preparations. Here is your very good health, young people!"

None of them had ever seen the old man in such a good temper nor in such radiant spirits.

CHAPTER XX.

HOW LILY FAINTED.

The children had all gone up-stairs to put on their hats and cloaks, but Lily lingered still in the school-room. Ostensibly she was putting away the books and slates; but who will blame the poor child that the excuse was but a very hollow one? It was the time Sir Edgar used so often to look into the school-room for five minutes, and for many days Lily had waited, and hoped, and longed for him to come; but she saw very little of him now

Her eyes were full of tears as she slowly and wearily put away the litter of objects that cumbered the table.

"I suppose he doesn't care to come now," she said to herself; "he must be getting quite fond of Lady Honoria, and I ought not to be sorry for it. Oh! no, I could not be so wicked as to be sorry, for as mamma told me, he never could have meant to marry me; but I did not expect that. It was happiness enough just to see him now and then: but perhaps it is better not—only it is very hard to bear!"

The door opened slowly behind her, and Lily turned round with a face radiant with sudden delight—only for an instant; in the next, every ray of pleasure had vanished out of it. It was Walter, not Edgar, who entered.

"All alone, lovely Lily?" cried the intruder, with a tone of bantering familiarity that was an insult in itself.

Lily colored deeply, but did not answer. She had already resented Walter's bold and disrespectfully expressed admiration; her pure instinct told her that he was not a good man.

"It is the first time I have had such luck since I have been in the house! Why do you always run away from me?" he asked, coming close to her.

"I have no wish to do so, Mr. Dyson," said Lily, quietly, though she was trembling very much; "but I am afraid I must go up-stairs now, the children are getting ready for their walk; I must not keep them waiting."

She moved towards the door, but Walter stood in her way.

"Nonsense! you are not going away just yet; you are going to stay and talk to me a little. Don't you know that you are very pretty? It's a shame of my mother to keep you mewed up in the school-room all day! Why don't you come into the smoking-room in the evening sometimes? You would always find me there alone; I go there directly after dinner, while my mother and brother are hanging over Lady Honoria and her everlasting singing. That sort of thing bothers me, you know. I'm not musical, and I'm not in love with Lady Honoria. I get away into the smoking-room with my pipe. Suppose you slip in there to-night and have a talk to me?"

"I don't think the smoking-room would be at all the proper place for me, Mr. Dyson."

"Any more, I suppose you mean, than the school-room is the proper place for me!"

Lily was silent for a minute, then she said, very quietly:

"Please let me pass, Mr. Dyson. I really must go up-stairs."

"You certainly shall not go until you've promised to come to the smoking-room after dinner to-night."

"I shall never promise that, Mr. Dyson," said Lily, firmly, wondering at her own boldness.

If she had had more knowledge of the world, she would have given the promise and have broken it afterwards. But none of the arts of deception lay in Lily's category of self-defence. She was frightened and indignant; but it did not occur to her to use guile or deception to escape from the man who was insulting her because she was poor and friendless.

She made another attempt to reach the door; but Walter Dyson placed himself so directly in her way, that, without a personal encounter, it was impossible for her to get at the handle.

"Mr. Dyson!" she cried, indignantly, "this is most ungenerous, most ungentlemanlike!"

"How pretty it looks when it is angry!" was the insulting reply.

Tears of distress and terror gathered in her eyes, and then all at once she heard an advancing footstep along the passage.

"For Heaven's sake let me go!" she cried, white with terror. "I hear some one coming—it must be Lady Dyson!"

"Then you shall give me a kiss before she comes!" cried Walter, and before she knew what he was doing, he seized her suddenly in his arms!

Lily uttered a faint cry! She was so paralized with terror and disgust that she had neither the strength to resist him or the courage to call loudly for help.

And then the door opened and she saw—not Lady Dyson, as she had expected—but Sir Edgar, erect, and stern, and pale, and for one startled moment, upon the threshold, ere, with a muttered oath, he turned angrily away, slamming the door violently behind him as he went.

Walter Dyson burst into a short coarse laugh.

"What fun! I've shocked the elder brother!" he cried.

But Lily heard him not. She slid from between his arms, as one who has got a death wound, and fell prone at his feet in a senseless, lifeless heap!

Walter uttered an exclamation of annoyance.

"Bother the girl! I hate a fainting woman! What on earth has she got to faint for?—squeamish little piece of propriety—why couldn't she just have a little harmless bit of fun like any other girl? If I had kissed her it would not have killed her! Well, I suppose I had better get out of this; there'll be every woman in the house here paesently with smelling-salts and sal-volatile! She'll come to fast enough if she's left alone."

And Mr. Walter, with no further thought or consideration for the unfortunate girl who, by reason of his unmanly and unprincipled conduct, lay now stretched, white and unconscious, on the ground, ignominiously departed as speedily as he could, without attempting to render the slightest succor to the unhappy governess!

Lily lay there still, and motionless, and white, like the flower whose name she bore. Afterward she found it in her heart to wish that she had never awakened from that death-like swoon.

Presently there came a buzzing in her ears, and that battling, choking sensation that accompanies the return to consciousness. And then a voice that seemed to speak to her out of a fog—calling her by name:

"Miss Finch—Miss Finch!" Then more whizzing whirring in her ears, and another dead, still interval of unconscious peace.

After that a violent pricking and stinging at her eyes and nose, which made her gasp and choke. Somebody was holding very strong salts under her nose; her head was being lifted up; and there was a splash of cold water against her face.

"She is coming to now, my lady," said one.

"Sprinkle a little more water over her forehead," said another.

Lily gave a shiver and then a groan; then suddenly she sat up on the floor, and looked bewilderedly about her.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The man who produced some little commotion in Washington recently by waking up the servants at the British Legation and demanding aid, proved to be an insane Irishman of the name of Looney.

Army Punishments.

In different sections of the army, various expedients were resorted to for the purpose of correcting minor offenses. What particular shape the punishment should assume depended very much upon the inventive faculty of the Field and Staff, or of such officers of the line as might have charge of the case.

Before taking the field, a few of the sneak-thieves were discovered prowling about among the tents. These were promptly drummed out of the camp to the tune of the "Rogues' March," the whole regiment shouting in derision as the miserable fellows took to their heels when the point was reached the limits of the camp, where they were told to be gone, and never show their faces in camp again on pain of a more severe handling.

If, while we were lying in camp, a man refused to do his duty, he was at once sent to the guard-house, which is the military name for "lock-up." Once there, at the discretion of the officers, he was either confined and put on bread and water, or else ordered to carry a log of wood in a knapsack filled with stones, "two hours on and two off," day and night, until such time as he was deemed to have done sufficient penance. In more extreme cases a court-martial was held, and the penalty was forfeiture of all pay due, with hard labor for thirty days, or the like, was inflicted.

One day, down in front of Petersburg, a number of us had been making a call on some acquaintances over in the regiment. As we were returning we came across what we took to be a well. Wishing a drink, we all stopped. The well in question, as was usual there, was not walled, but a barrel sunk in the ground; for in such places the ground was so full of springs that in order to get water, all you had to do was to sink a box or barrel, and the water would soon collect of its own accord. Some one looked down and looking into the barrel noticed motion. Andy discovered a man standing in the well, engaged in bailing out the water. "What's he doing there in that barrel?" asked one of our company.

"Why," said the guard, who was standing near by, and whom we had taken for the customary guard of the spring, "you fellers comrades, our Colonel has his own way of punishin' the boys. One thing he won't have 'em do—he won't let 'em get into camp when they do, they go into the gopher hole. The one there, is in the gopher hole now. That barrel has a spring at the bottom, and the water comes in pretty fast; and if Jim wants to keep dry, he's got to keep dippin' all the time, or else stand in the water up to his waist—and Jim isn't so mighty fond of water, neither."—From "Recollections of a Drummer-boy," by Harry M. Kieffer, in September St. Nicholas.

A Disappointed and Disgusted Cow.

About 8 o'clock yesterday morning a man smoking plug tobacco in an old pipe walked out of a Michigan avenue barn with a rat in a trap. He looked neither to the right nor to the left until he had reached the middle of the street. Then he set the trap on the ground and whistled for a dog. If he had a dog, the animal did not respond, but the public did. In less than two minutes thirty men were rushing to the spot.

"Hi! there! Don't let him out of my dog," shouted one.

"Hold on! Wait for the dogs!" yelled half a dozen voices at once.

"Keep cool and form a circle!" commanded a policeman, as he took a firmer grip on his baton.

The man with the trap spread a handkerchief over it and waited. He was not a bit excited. On the contrary he was as placid as a ship sailing in the wake.

"Whar' did ye ketch him?" inquired a newsboy.

The placid man did not deign to reply.

"What'll ye take for him?" asked another, but his inquiry was treated with the same silent contempt.

Then four or five men came running with dogs under their arms, and in fifteen dogs on foot following behind. It was a fight between a bull dog and a foundland, and there would have been between owners had not a second police appeared. Order was finally restored, dogs were arranged in a circle and let their collars, and the placid man knocked the ashes from his pipe, looked fully round, and then raised the trap shook the rat out. All the dogs made rush, but in ten seconds each and canine walked off on his ear and seemed be hurt in his feelings. A boy stepped ward and held the rat up to view.

"It's a crockery rat!" he yelled and whirled it around.

"Yes, it vhas a groggery rat, and cost me den cents," calmly replied the man as he walked off with his trap.

Women as Clerks.

Of late years the employment of women as clerks has greatly increased in England as well as in France; and in both countries it is generally agreed that the system works satisfactorily. At the Bank of France there are now 160 female clerks, who receive 2 francs a day to commence with, and work up to annual salary, after a year or two of service, rises to 1,800 francs; and at the Paris offices of the Credit Foncier, where also there is a large staff of woman, the remuneration, beginning at 3.50 francs a day, rises in exceptional cases to as much as 4,000 francs, or £160 a year. In both establishments the hours of attendance are from 9 to 4 on 6 days of the week; and the male and female clerks work in different rooms—the women being employed intended by officials of their own sex, and thus enjoying the greatest possible degree of privacy.

Did not Ask.

Baby is very exacting at table. Her mother has, in consequence, been obliged to forbid her to ask for anything. The other day there was a dish of magnificent strawberries upon the table. Baby coveted them with longing eyes. She threw a supplicating glance at her mother, and another at her father, but this characteristic mimicry was unsuccessful. Baby was disconsolate. She uttered a deep sigh, and, leaning over to her father's side, in a way to be well heard she said: "Papa, tell mamma that I have not asked for any strawberries."

Peake, Toronto, the secretary of the Canadian branch, who will give all information about what is to be done and how it is to be set about. Young men and women, go in for a four years' course of systematic reading.

The "boy preacher" the other day, among other things said that Jonathan Edwards said there were children in hell "a span long." We would like to see Mr. Harrison verify that statement by giving chapter and verse in Jonathan Edwards' words to that effect. Till this is done, it may be as well to receive the statement with a considerable amount of reservation. We would not like to say that it is not true, still it is in the last degree unlikely, and seems merely a bit of sensational, and not very reliable quoting. Mr. Harrison please give the reference.

It is generally very dangerous to preface a good story by saying "I am going to tell you one of the very best things you ever heard in your life," but in this case I am not afraid to venture even that. An English traveller in Ireland, greedy for information, and always fingering the note-book in his breast pocket, got into the same railway carriage with a certain Roman Catholic archbishop. Ignorant of his rank, and only perceiving that he was a divine, he questioned him pretty closely about the state of the country, whiskey-drinking, etc., etc. At last he said, "You are a parish priest yourself, of course?"

His Grace drew himself up. "I was one, sir," he answered with icy gravity.

"Dear! dear!" was the sympathizing rejoinder; "that accursed drink, I suppos !

No one, it is affirmed, who has ever passed successfully through the crisis of typhoid fever of such a malignant type as that by which the Prince was assailed, is ever physically himself again. It is added that the Prince is fully aware of this himself, and, as a consequence, is exceedingly careful of himself, both as to eating, drinking and all the etcetcras. It is quite probable that there may be some truth in this, but it is to be hoped the coloring is darker than the facts will justify.

The House of Lords has thrown out the bill for the abolition of pigeon shooting as a sport. This is greatly to be regretted, for a more disgusting, discreditable and cruel sport than the one referred to could not be named. It is simply a thing fit for barbarians and brutes, and the lords in seeking to perpetuate the infamy have done anything rather than covered themselves with glory.

When a troublesome interviewer used to come to Cetywayo during his stay in England he would send word by his interpreter, "The King sleeps." "The King sleeps," thought the Jingo party and those who have all along secretly favored the suzerainty and final annexation of Zululand, when they heard of Cetywayo's death at the battle of Ulundi. They were prepared to sing as of Napoleon—

He sleeps his last sleep, he has fought his last battle,
No sound can awake him to glory again.

But Cetywayo is alive and his existence keeps the Zulu, if not the whole South African, problem before the British public still. There is no doubting this, that for a savage, Cetywayo in his days of undisputed sovereignty ruled wisely and well, and it is the duty of the British Government to give him at least their moral support and not by withdrawing their countenance encourage Cetywayo's enemies and those colonial agitators who would like to destroy the King's life and power in order to occupy the country themselves. Between these two sets of people anarchy will reign in Zululand and the Zulus be reared with a taste for blood which will long outlive the factions of Cetywayo's time.

Who keeps up the groggeries in the cities? For the most part the workingmen. Does any one believe that one fifth of these places could exist if all the wages-receiving part of the population were becoming total abstainers? Of course not. One might as well question the existence of the sun at midday as question such a fact, and closing the eyes won't put out the sun any more than lusty denials will prevent its being a fact that hundreds of workingmen in Toronto and everywhere are kept on the very verge of starvation and at the beck and call of employers, simply because of their improvident and dissipated habits. They might be the most independent and influential section of the community. Why are they not? The tavern keepers can tell, and they themselves might. If we could only manage even to provoke them into giving up drinking it would be a great thing, and it has too great a regard for their welfare to seek the favor of any by concealing or distorting the facts. If people, instead of suspecting this one and that of writing about them, and abusing those who, as likely as not, have nothing to do with the matter, would only sweep before their own doors and try to avoid becoming wasteful sots, it would be a great matter. We know right well and rejoices in the fact that many working men are as sober, upright and intelligent members of the community as could be desired. But that there are too many others the reverse needs no witchcraft to discern. If any one desires the evidence he has but to look round.

An old Vermont farmer rather took the census man aback the other day. The census man asked him if he was married. "No, I beant," was the reply. "Childless, then, I suppose," going to make the entry. "Wal, no—not exactly," replied the veteran. "I hev got forty-two on 'em." "Gracious!" exclaimed the interlocutor, dropping his pencil; "I thought you said you wasn't married!" "Wall, I ain't," was the reply, "but I uster be."

Much art: "What's that thing?" asked a dairyman, as a chromo-peddlar held up a picture in which all the hues of the rainbow were displayed in reckless profusion, without regard to harmony or correctness. "A cow," replied the smiling art connoisseur, with a show of pride. "A cow?" gasped the milk-handler, "well, that's the first time I ever saw a green cow browsing on salmon-colored grass. Here, John!" he yelled to the hired man "bring me the gun!" but the chromo fiend climbed the fence and made a break for the woods.

I want a business answer." "You shall have it, sir; I will aid the enterprise by furnishing the corpse." The stranger hurried off without even mentioning the sort off epitaph he designed having engraved on the sacred stone.

A Japanese Custom.

"The following details," says the Pall Mall Gazette, "with regard to the hair-dressing of Japanese ladies may be of interest in these days, and may help to elucidate much of the mystery which always surrounds the meaning of a Japanese picture. In Japan a girl at the age of nine wears her hair tied up in a red scarf bound around the back of her head; the forehead is left bare, with the exception of a couple of locks, one on each side. When she is of a marriageable age she combs her hair forward, and make it up into the shape of a fan or a butterfly, and at the same time decorates it with silver cord and balls of varied colors. This means everything, and is fully understood by the young men of Japan. A widow who wishes for a second husband puts a tortoise-shell pin horizontally at the back of her head and twists her hair around it, while an unconsolable widow cuts her hair short and goes in for no adornment of any sort. These last are very rare. By these simple means much confusion is avoided. A glance around a ball-room suffices to tell the age and status of every lady in the place, and a great deal might be said for the introduction of such a custom into this country."

How He Doubled His Trade.

Mr. Benj. W. Paton, pharmacist, Globe Village, Mass., says that the miraculous pain-cure St. Jacobs Oil, has greatly helped his other business, and the sales of the remedy have doubled in one month. He keeps a large supply always on hand. Officers of the Army and Navy pronounced St. Jacobs Oil to be the greatest pain-cure of the age.

From Mr. EDWARD MITCHELL, Manager of the Bank of Commerce, Hamilton, Ont.

Hamilton, January 15th, 1883.

J. N. SUTHERLAND, St. Catharines.

My Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your favor of yesterday's date, asking my experience with regard to RHEUMATINE, and I have no hesitation whatever in pronouncing it a success in my case, and in heartily recommending the remedy to those suffering from rheumatism. I suffered for months with that trouble in my right arm and shoulder, and often was unable to use my hand, and at night the pain was frequently so great as to render sleep an impossibility. I must confess that I entertained a repugnance to "patent" medicines, but some of my friends persuaded me to try "Rheumatine," and although it may be true that I might have got well without it, one thing I do know, that after taking four bottles the pain took its departure, and I have now the full use of my arm. I heartily wish you unbounded success, as I fully believe your remedy is all that you advertise it to be.

I am, my dear sir, yours most truly,
E. MITCHELL.

It is easy finding reason why other people should be patient.

J. E. Kennedy, dispensing chemist, Cobourg, says that no blood purifier that he has ever handled has had such a large sale as Burdock Blood Bitters, and adds, "in no case have I heard a customer say ought but words of highest praise for its remedial qualities. (31)

Art may err but nature cannot miss, therefore the natural Hair Restorer—Carboline—cannot fail to prove a blessing to those whose hair may be scant and falling out.

Disparage and depreciate no one; an insect has feeling and an atom a shadow.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increasing sales; as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits." It is the grand specific for diseases of Blood, Liver and Kidneys. 25,000 bottles have been sold, during the last three months. (34)

Hungry and restless, that is what we all are, until He takes us up and feeds us.

There is no remedy known to medical science that is more positive in its effect, to cure Cholera Morbus, Colic, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera Infantum, and all Bowel Complaints than Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. (35)

Rest satisfied with doing well, and leave others to talk of you as they please.

How They do It.—So-called respectable people would hesitate considerably before pilfering your pockets in a crowded thoroughfare. That would be too too. The same discrimination is not indicated by the so-called respectable druggist when that wonderful corn cure, Putnam's Corn Extractor, is asked for. Watch for these gentlemen, and take none other than Putnam's Corn Extractor. Sold by druggist everywhere. N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, proprietors.

It is no small fault to be bad, and seem so; it is a greater fault to seem good, and not to be so.

It is a fact that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has more well-earned testimonials of praise for its virtues in curing Cholera, Colic, Cholera Infantum, Dysentery, etc., than all other remedies of that class combined. It will stand investigation. (36)

Education begins the gentleman, but reading, good company and education must finish him.

The colors of the Triangle Dyes are so beautiful, and their use so simple, they lead the dye market of the country. 10 cents.

In thy book, O Lord, are written all they that do what they can, though they cannot do what they would.

Age should always command respect. In the case of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry it certainly does, for 25 years that has been the standard remedy with the people, for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colic and all Bowel Complaints. (33)

We should never make enemies, if for no other reason, because it is hard to behave towards them as we ought.

According to report Patti received $3,000 for three songs at the soiree given by Alfred Rothschild recently.

C. S. Judson, Wallaceburg, says Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, for Summer Complaints is a splendid preparation, and I do not know of a single case in which it has not given satisfaction, but on the contrary have had many testimonials to its efficacy. (32)

The population of France, by the last census, is 35,405,290. The females are in excess by 121,254.

CONFIDENTIAL.

THOUSANDS of young Men and Women—married and single—through the effects of vicious youthful habits, or excessive indulgence in later years, have so undermined their general systems as to induce almost every other disease, and the real cause of these troubles being scarcely ever suspected, they are drugged and doctored for everything but the right one. THE JERUSEBIN COMBINATION REMEDY is offered as a speedy and certain cure, as hundreds afflicted with every form of disease have been restored to complete health by its use, after all other remedies failed. The recuperative powers of this medicine are truly astonishing, and, in troubles arising from imprudence, its continued use for a short time changes the languid, debilitated condition, to one of renewed life and vigour. Forwarded to any address, on receipt of price, Two Dollars per package—sufficient for one month's treatment.

Towns are now being visited by swindlers who call themselves agents for some city dyeing establishment. They call at a residence to collect shawls, clothing, etc., to be dyed and returned, but the owners never see any more of their goods. Let all beware.

TRUE TO HER TRUST.

Too much cannot be said of the ever faithful wife and mother, constantly watching and caring for her dear ones, never neglecting a single duty in their behalf. When they are assailed by disease, and the system should have a thorough cleaning, the stomach and bowels regulated, blood purified, a malarial poison exterminated, she must know that Electric Bitters are the only sure remedy. They are the best and purest medicine in the world and only cost fifty cents. Sold by A. Turner.

A High School Master and a young lady student recently met, the subject of conversation naturally being the recent examinations: Master—"Your marks are very low, and you have only just pssed." Young lady —"Oh, I am so glad. Master, surprised—" Why? Young lady—"I do so love a tight squeeze.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. Turner & Co's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

Mr. Davenport, ignored this fact and swam accross to the Canada shore in 3 minutes and 59 seconds.

DISASTROUS FIRE.

MEAFORD, Sept. 7.—Another disastrous fire has occurred in Meaford. This morning about 3:30 fire was discovered issuing from the roof of a woodshed adjoining the steam flouring and grist-mill of Messrs. Kerr & Cook The alarm was at once raised but as the flames spread with fearful rapidity the splendid mill soon became enveloped in the flames. The mill, which was built on town property in 1869, was a magnificent structure of its kind. It was three storeys in hight, 40 by 80 feet, and contained four run of stones, besides combined stone and roller process apparatus. The mill has been working day and night, and when at twelve o'clock last night the head miller and engineer left, everything was all right. The contents of the mill were all destroyed, and consisted of 250 barrels of flour, which was to have been shipped to-day, from 1,500 to 2,000 bushels of wheat, 500 bushels of oats, and 15 tons of bran. Messrs. Kerr & Cook's loss is $12,000, and there is insurance on the building and stock amounting to $7,000. At six o'clock the mill was a pile of ashes.

There is some talk of the date of the fall show being changed so that the Proton and Melancthon exhibitions may not be held on the same day.

On Thursday evening last, Mr. McCullough, sr. went out to the woods for the cows. He did not return at dark and his friends rightly conjectured that he was lost. The alarm was given and the villagers turned out in full force with lanterns, etc. He was found about eleven o'clock that night. As he was advanced in years, a night in the woods might have resulted seriously.

CANADA'S PROGRESS.

Her Rapid Strides Forward.

Interesting Statistics regarding our Population, our Manufactures, our Banking and Investments.

The report on the trade and commerce of the Dominion, prepared and issued by Mr. W. G. Patterson, secretary of the Montreal Board of Trade, is now to hand, and contains so much useful and interesting information regarding the commerce of Canada and its expansion during recent years that it demands extended notice. Mr. Patterson, in his production, deals first with the progress of Canada as a whole, and secondly with the growth of the trade of Montreal. With the improvement of trade in Canada Montreal must become a moro important centre. It is, therefore, not surprising to learn that the tonnage entering at that port has tripled in sixteen years, and that every twelvemonth shows an increase in its imports, its exports and its manufactures. The statistics regarding Montreal are, however, of minor interest compared with those presented regarding the entire Dominion. It is the more general information contained in the report that interests the outside reader. In the first place reference is made to of Canada. Our population in 1871 was 3,635,024; in 1881 it reached 3,324,810, an increase of 633,341, or at the rate of 18.98 per cent. There are in Canada 513 acres to every person, 503 of which are unoccupied. There are not quite so many females as males in the country.

The high position which Canada is taking as a field for settlement is illustrated by the following statement, giving the number of immigrants who have annually made their home here since 1877:—1877, 35,285; 1878, 40,032; 1879, 61,052; 1880, 85,850; 1881, 117,016; 1882, 193,150.

It will be observed that five times as many people setttled in Canada in 1882 as in 1877. Of course the natural increase in population and the additions by immigration have tended to enlarge the population of our cities and towns. Winnipeg is the city in which the most marvellous growth has taken place. Its population has increased in a decade by 3,213 per cent. It contained 241 people in 1871, while ten years later it boasted 7,985. St. Thomas comes next in the order of growth. Its record, owing to the construction of railways and establishment of manufactures there, is 280 per cent., Victoria, B. C. has grown 81 per cent., and Toronto has grown 54 per cent. Toronto surpasses Montreal in the rate of its enlargement by 23 per cent, the latter city having increased in population by only 31 per cent. in the decade. Of course it is impossible to deal with the progress of Canada without omething

ABOUT THE NORTH-WEST.

According to Mr. Patterson that territory contains 600 square miles, or 384,000,000 acres of land well adapted for settlement and cultivation. In estimating the capabilities of the country and the number of people it will hold, he says:—"The population of Germany in 1871 was 42,726,844, spread over an area of 212,091 square miles—the average being 201 persons to a square mile. To show the capacity of the most fertile part of the North-West to sustain in comfort, if not affluence, an industrious people, it has been computed that there would be plenty of room within the 600,000 square miles first mentioned for over 120,000,000 inhabitants—that number being nearly equal to the combined populations of Germany, France, Italy, and Spain, in the year 1871. The area of the United Kingdom is only equal to about one-fifth of these fertile lands; while the extents of Germany and France are, respectively, but little more than one-third. But a different illustration can be presented, which may probably be more readily comprehended by the people of Canada and the United States. The area of the State of New York is 47,000 square miles; the area of Texas is 274,356 square miles, or nearly six times as great as the "Empire State." Twelve provinces, each equal in area to New York, might easily be carved out of the fertile region of the Canadian North-West. Texas has not half the area of the latter region:—the combined areas of the States of Texas, Oregon, Minnesota, Kansas, and Missouri, amount only to 601,402 square miles; while the five largest territories of the union—Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, and Utah, have but an aggregate area of 563,361 square miles."

As a grain producer the North-West is far in advance of the American Western States. Its product per acre in wheat, barley, and oats is compared with the products of the States in the same staples in the following table, the figures being from official sources:—

	Wheat. Bushels per acre.	Barley. Bushels per acre.	Oats. Bushels per acre.
Canadian North-West	28	40	57
Minnesota	17	25	37
Wisconsin	13	20	..
Iowa	10	22	28
Illinois	8	17	..
Indiana	..	19	..
Ohio	10	19	33

THE FARMERS' WORK.

The following statement gives an idea of the result of the labours of the farmers of the Dominion for one year—the year is 1880:—Wheat—Acres sown, 2,366,554; spring wheat, yield, 12,102,817, bush.; winter wheat, yield, 20,247,462, bush.; Barley, yield, 16,844,868, bush.; oats, yield, 70,493,131, bush.; rye, yield, 2,097,180, bush.; peas and beans, yield, 13,749,662, bush.; buck wheat, yield, 4,901,147, bush.; corn (maize), yield, 9,025,142, bush.; potatoes—Acres sown, 464,289, yield, 55,268,227, bush.; turnips, yield, 39,058,094, bush.; other root-crops, yield, 9,129,320, bush.; hay—acres sown, 4,458,349, yield, 5,055,810 tons; grass and clover seed, yield, 324,317 bush.

In the matter of home-made articles, the products of the home circle on the farm have greatly increased during the last decade.

While the products of the farm have increased, our lumber and fishing and mining interests have been also greatly developed. The ocean, for instance, yielded fish to the value of $16,800,000 in 2882, against $14,400,000 in 1880, an increase of $20,000,000. It ishardly necesear to point out that there has been a marvellous increase in the number and importance of

OUR INDUSTRIES.

Between 1871 and 1881 the capital invested in manufacturing was more than doubled. The number of persons directly employed in manufacturing was increased by over seventy thousand.

Not the least gratifying showing made in this connection is the increase in the average rate of wages paid. But this is only a general statement. Mr. Patterson particularizes and gives special information regarding distinct industries. Thus, he deals with

COTTON MANUFACTURING.

Touching this branch of indnstry he gives the gratifying intelligence that the following additional lines of production are being entered into during 1883:—Brown sheetings and shirtings, bleached and fancy shirtings, apron checks, nun's stripes, denims, ticks, ducks, cottonades, crotchet and knitting cottons, beam warps for woollen mills, drills, bags, wadding and batting, cheviots, Canton flannels, shoe ducks, pocketings, wigans.

The list of new lines it will be seen is quite formidable. In 1879 there were seven cotton mills. There are now (1883) twenty, which can produce $10,400,000 worth of goods per annum.

In the woollen trade great advance appears to have been made. Referring to the

SUGAR TRADE

Mr. Patterson points out that there are five refineries in operation in the Dominion at present—two in Montreal, one in Moncton, and one Halifax—representing a capital of over $2,750,000, giving direct employment to about 3,500 workmen, and indirectly to over 30,000 persons. It is now definitely stated that the refinery at Woodstock, opposite Halifax, will be in operation next year, with a capacity fully equal to that of the Canada Sugar Refining Company's works in Toronto. To-day, he observes, instead of importing refined sugar, 93¾ per cent. of the aggregate importation consists of raw sugar.

THE COAL TRADE.

Last year Canada used 2,524,826 tons of coal. Half of this was imported, and half of it came from the mines in Nova Scotia. No less than 30,000 tons of Nova Scotia coal was used in Montreal during the year. Then there is an increased demand for the coal in Nova Scotia owing to the establishment there recently of iron and steel works, sugar refineries, cotton mills, glass works, and other industries. This partly explains the increase in the output of the province from 688,625 tons in 1879 to 1,250,179 tons in 1892. The following facts regarding are given: "Ten million more letters and post-cards were carried in 1881-82 than in 1880-81. During the same year the postal revenue has increased by a quarter of a million of dollars, while the post-office expenditure is only a quarter of a million more in 1881-82 than it was in 1880-81. In the three years ended 30th June, 1882, the postal revenue has increased rather more than 20 per cent., and the expenditure only 7½ per cent.; if this relative rate of increase can be maintained the department will be self-sustaining in a few years. The figures of the Savings Bank Department most markedly indicate the prosperity of the wages-earning population, the deposits on 31st December, 1882, being $10,840,642, exactly double what they were in March, 1881; the average amount standing to each amount on 30th June, 1882, was $184, which is an increase of 52 per cent. over the previous year, while the number of depositors has increased 30 per cent.

OUR BANKS.

The following very interesting particulars are given by Mr. Patterson to show how greatly Canadian institutions have expended and prospered during the past quarter of a century. They relate to the banks in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec:

Paid-up capital		June, 1858..	$ 17,588,000
		April, 1883..	54,700,000
Circulation		June, 1858..	7,800,000
		April, 1883..	35,500,000
Banks	$29,200,100
Government..	6,300,000
Deposits		June, 1858..	9,100,000
		April, 1883..	133,000,000
Banks	$98,300,000
Post-Office	11,300,000
Loan Companies	13,400,000
Savings Banks	10,000,000
Discounts		June, 1858..	30,100,000
		April, 1883..	160,000,000

It may appropriately be noted here, Mr. Patterson adds, that the progressive enlargement in the import and export trade of Canada has been in even a greater ratio, as shown by the subjoined figures covering a period of thirty-three years.

1850,	Imports and exports	$ 40,000,000
1868,	do. do.	130,000,000
1882,	do. do.	221,556,703

The trade in 1881 was larger in proportion to population than that of the United States; while the shipping (in proportion to population) was more than four times as large.

A great deal of other very interesting and gratifying information is given by Mr. Patterson in his report. Enough, however, has been quoted to show that Canada commercially is advancing, and that in every branch of industry her progress is of such a character as to make every man who is loyal to his country pleased.

A soldier in battle should feel as if the whole battle depended upon himself.

One rule he didn't break: In one of Boston's leading clubs two prominent members were discussing the peccadilloes of another member. Said one: "That fellow deserves to be expelled. He has broken every rule of the club, save one." "Which rule is that?" asked the other. "That which forbids feeing the servants," was the reply.

"May I have the honor to conduct your daughter to the supper table?" asked a society gentleman of a lady from the country, who was staying with some friends whom she was visiting in Austin. "May you take her to supper?" was the response. "Why, of course; and you can take me too. That's what we came here for."

How they last; Gentlemen—"How can you afford to sell these rifles for five dollars? They certainly can't be good for much. They won't stand much service, will they?" Dealer—"They will last as long as the man who fires them; what more would you want?" Gentleman thinks "sure enough," and goes off without a rifle.

SCIENCE.

Bricks impregnated at a high temperature with asphalt are being successfully used in Berlin for street pavement.

A curious fact has been observed by Profs. Ayrton and Perry. Soft iron when heated between a red and a white heat ceases to be attracted by a magnet. When soft iron is bent between red and white hot iron, it ceases to be attracted by a magnet.

Not one quarter of the melon and squash seeds planted ever reach the fruit-producing stage on account of the ravages of the squash bug. If this were not so the markets and farmers' tables would be better supplied. An application of whale oil soap in suds drives away these pests. The soap is not more offensive in smell than the squash bug, but it is different and his bugship cannot endure it.

To insure the safety of any one compelled to descend into cesspools or places filled with foul gas it is necessary to lower, by means of a string or wire, a tin pan (or other flat vessel) containing a small quantity of ordinary gunpowder, and then ignite that by dropping live coals on it. After the explosion it is well to lower a lighted candle to the bottom. If it continues to burn it can be taken as a sure test that all danger is removed, and the descent can safely be made.

The Spanish Government, taking a hint from the English proceedings during the Egyptian campaign, have ordered the construction of an armored train of special design for use in war. It is to consist of twenty-six trucks, containing ammunition stores and food, engineers' work shop and telegraph plant; and several field guns. It will be propelled by two heavily armored locomotives, one at each end, and will have a crew of nearly two hundred men, who will sleep on board their strange craft if required.

A new and valuable use has been found for oyster-shells, which until recently were utilised only in making lime. It has been discovered that the shells make a capital foundation for oyster-beds, and within the past two years many thousands of bushels have been used for this purpose in the United States. The oysterman selects a good spot for the bed, and simply drops the shells overboard. This is done in July and August, during the spawning season. The spawn attaches itself to the shell, and in two years the shell is covered with young oysters. These are big enough to seed, and, are therefore planted. Sometimes thirty or forty of such oysters are found attached to a single shell. The shells are worth only three-half-pence per bushel when thrown overboard, but at the end of two years they are worth from two to three shillings per bushel, allowing a very good margin for profit.

In the life-saving section of the London Fisheries Exhibition was shown a simple little contrivance for stopping holes in ships, which has been before the public for one or two years, and has during that time has been instrumental in saving more than one vessel from destruction. It is known as J. W. Wood's Self-adjusting Rivet-hole and Leak Stopper, and is applicable to ships, buoys, boilers, torpedo boats, etc. It consists of an iron disk covered with felt which screws on to a rod, at the end of which is a jointed T-piece. Supposing that a shot-hole in a ship's side has to be stopped, the T-piece is thrust through the opening, and the jointed piece put crosswise, so that it cannot be readily withdrawn. The felted disk is now slipped over the rod and screwed firmly as far as it will go and the operation is complete. The disks, of various sizes and shapes, are supplied to the Admiralty, and are coming into extensive use in the merchant service. The importance and efficiency of this invention were recognized by the Society of Arts by the grant of their Albert silver medal.

Brain-Work and Food.

The notion that those who work only with their brain need less food than those who labor with their hands has long been proved fallacious. Mental labor causes greater waste of tissue than muscular. According to careful estimates, three hours of hard study wear out the body more than a whole day of hard physical exertion. "Without phosphorus, no thought," is the German saying; and the consumption of that essential ingredient of the brain increases in proportion to the amount of labor which this organ is required to perform. The wear and tear of the brain are easily measured by careful examination of the salts in the liquid excretions. The importance of the brain as a working organ is shown by the amount of blood it receives, which is proportionally greater than that of any other part of the body. One-fifth of the blood goes to the brain, though its average weight is only one-fortieth of that of the body. This fact alone would be sufficient to prove that brain-workers require more food, and even better food, than mechanics or farm laborers.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

Manufacturers of Windmills and Pumps.

POINTS OF EXCELLENCE IN OUR WINDMILL.

It is self-governing, and therefore suffers no damage from high winds or blizzards; it is simple in construction, therefore not liable to get out of order; it has fewer friction points, (there being only three,) than any other mill, therefore runs easier, and has greater power than any wheel of the same size; it is not affected by sleet or snow, therefore runs as well in winter as in summer. It is neat in appearance, and an ornament to any residence.

THE FARMERS' FRIEND—OUR GEARED WINDMILL,

Has now been thoroughly tested and has proven a complete success, operating all kinds of farm machinery, such as Feed Grinders, Corn Shellers, Straw Cutters, Elevators, Circular Saws, Grindstones, Churns, Pumps, &c. &c.

The Windmill is very easily managed and very durable, and the work may be done on rainy days or at other times when outdoor work is suspended.

The cost of running is nothing, only a little oil.

We shall have both kinds of Mills in operation at Industrial Exhibition. Come and see us.

One of the many testimonials we have received:—

DEAR SIR,—In reference to how the 14 ft. geared Windmill and Grinder works, am pleased to inform you it gives the best of satisfaction in every particular; the chop is fully as good as any I can get from the grist mill, and in a fair wind it will grind 100 bushels per day, and is just the thing for this country.

Yours very respectfully, R. G. ARMSTRONG.

ARABI PASHA INTERVIEWED.

His Life in Ceylon—Resigned to his Captivity and Studying English.

L'Evenement of Paris publishes the account of an interview of one of its correspondents with Arabi Pasha. After giving a description of the outside of the pretty cottage inhabited by Arabi, and let to him by a rich English merchant of Colombo, who had placed an interpreter at the disposal of the interviewer, the latter continues:—"I arrived at nine o' clock at Arabi's. My card was taken in immediately by a servant, but I was obliged to wait for about 20 minutes before I could see the Pasha. Overpowered by the heat I am sipping my third brandy and soda, when, dragging himself along, my card in one hand, Arabi appears, half asleep yet, but smoking a Levantine cigar. The Arabian interpreter whom I have brought conveys my greetings and tells him that, belonging to the French press, I could not leave Ceylon without waiting upon the valiant soldier who had so courageously fought in defence of Egyptian nationality. While seemingly flattered by the interested compliment Arabi tells me that he makes no merit of his struggle for the freedom of Egypt, that he was but the instrument of Allah. He adds that if fate condemns him to exile he himself is resigned to it in the firm hope that Egypt is marching toward a period of prosperity and liberty that will make her forget the bloody days through which she has just passed." To the interviewer's remarks that England might make Egypt prosperous, and perhaps happy, but never free, Arabi observed: "Events do but obey the law of fatality. God has willed it that the English should become our masters. He has willed it for the welfare of the Egyptian people. Your pen will convey my words very far. As such please to say that by now I have learned to respect the English as the best friends of Egypt. As you know, perhaps, I am learning English; it is my favorite occupation; and my most ardent wish is to obtain of the British Government the authorization to go to London to lay at Queen Victoria's feet the assurance of my devotion." M. Paulhan then asked if Arabi ever expected to see Egypt again. "It would assuredly be a great joy, but if my presence there would entail fresh complications I would by far prefer the sacrifice of my most ardent wish to the good of my country. Abdel-Kader the great emir who so loyally served France, after having so courageously combated her, has just died at Damascus, far from the Algeria he loved so well. If Allah reserves for me a similar fate I must submit to the Divine will."

A reporter who had just done his first boat-race was rebuked by the city editor for not mentioning anywhere that the oarsmen "took water," and replied that none of them took water. They all took gin.

Prehistoric Tides.

At present the moon is 240,000 miles away: but there was a time when the moon was only one-sixth part of this, or say 40,000 miles away. That time must have corresponded to some geological epoch. It may have been earlier than the time when Eozoon lived. It is more likely to have been later. I want to point out that when the moon was only 40,000 miles away we had in it a geological engine of tran-cendent power. If the present tide be 3 feet, and if the early tides be 216 times their present amount, then it is plain that the ancient tides must have been 648 feet.

There can be no doubt that in ancient times tides of this amount and even tides very much larger must have occurred. I ask the geologists to take account of these facts, and to consider the effect—a tidal rise and fall of 648 feet twice every day. Dwell for a moment on the sublime spectacle of a tide 648 feet high, and see what an agent it would be for the performance of geological work! We are now standing, I suppose, some 500 feet above the level of the sea. The sea is a good many miles from Birmingham, yet if the rise and fall at the coast were 648 feet, Birmingham might be as great a seaport as Liverpool. Three-quarters tide would bring the sea into the streets of Birmingham. At high tide there would be about 150 feet of blue water over our heads. Every house would be covered, and the tops of a few chimneys would alone indicate the site of the town.

In a few hours more the whole of this vast flood would have retreated. Not only would it leave England high and dry, but probably the Straits of Dover would be drained, and perhaps even Ireland would in a literal sense become a member of the United Kingdom. A few hours pass, and the whole of England is again inundated, but only again to be abandoned.

These mighty tides are the gift which astronomers have now made to the working machinery of the geologist. They constitute an engine of terrific power to aid in the great work of geology. What would the puny efforts of water in other ways accomplish when compared with these majestic tides and the great currents they produce?

In the great primeval tide will probably be found the explanation of what has long been a reproach to geology. The early palæozoic rocks form a stupendous mass of ocean-made beds, which, according to Professor Williamson, are twenty miles thick up at the top of the silurian beds. It has long been a difficulty to conceive how such a gigantic quantity of material could have been ground up and deposited at the bottom of the sea. The geologists said: "The rivers and other agents of the present day will do it if you give them time enough." But, unfortunately, the mathematicians and the natural philosophers would not give them time enough, and they ordered the geologists to "hurry up their phenomena." The mathematicians had other reasons for believing that the earth could not have been so old as the geologists demanded. Now, however, the mathematicians have discovered the new and stupendous tidal grinding-engine. With this powerful aid the geologists can get through their work in a reasonable period of time, and the geologists and the mathematicians may be reconciled.

A Hard Virtue.

Forbearance, considerateness,—we need them everywhere we go. Our common imperfections are mutual limitations. They demand self-restraint, patience, mutual concession. These virtues are hard, but so are all. These are especially hard, because they are incessant. I will tell you what will help much to make them practicable, perhaps easy. Do them for God. It is God's ends that demand them, which demand these almost more notably than some others. His greatest end is Love. No material or intellectual progress; no prosperity, in church, state, or home; no moral, religious, social or philantrophic interest,—is so precious to him as the mutual sympathy among his children, out of which alone his two great aims can reach fruition. These two great aims are the development of our race and the elevation of our individual characters. Humanity cannot progress, save as we stand closely by each other, heart and hand; our own characters cannot beautify themselves, save as we attain to the unselfish benevolence which is the comprehensive symbol of the divine character. What is hard for yourself then, do for God. Let his love be the reward of your self-sacrifice. He has made self-sacrifice the law of the universe: each thing, each being, depends on and gives itself for the other. The extinction of self is the paraphrase of love. Be sure that in habitual self-constraint, in self-forgetfulness for others' good, in considerateness, in forbearance, in yielding to other's views and wishes so far as conscience will allow, we are both rejoicing and resembling Him. If He should mark iniquity, who should stand? Let us not then! "Let not us judge one another, but judge this rather, that no one put a stumbling-block, or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." So (is it not sweet, is it not manly?) so says the zealous, persistent, self-confident, but self-sacrificing, the, of all men, most manly Paul. And also, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Wherefore, to go back to his Master for a general maxim, "Have salt in yourselves, and have peace with one another."—Joseph May.

During the first few years of this century there lived in England a man named Daniel Lambert who weighed 739 pounds. When he died in 1807 his coffin could not be brought down the stairs of the house in which he died, and the wall at the sides of the window had to be broken away in order to find an exit. He was five feet eleven inches in height, measured nine feet four inches around the body and three feet one inch around the leg.

A gentleman who lately had business in the General Land Office at San Francisco said his Christian name was "Usual." This was thought to be a joke by the Register, but the gentleman gave this explanation of how he happened to receive it: His father was greatly desirous of having a daughter, but as child after child was born to him he was disappointed. When the seventh child was born, his father was compelled to exclaim: "A boy, as usual. I guess he will have to go through life as Usual." Such has proved to be the case.

TOPICS FOR WOMEN.

THE CHRISTIAN MOTHER.

There she sits, the old Christian mother, ripe for Heaven. Her eyesight is almost gone, but the splendors of the celestial city kindle up her vision. The gray light of Heaven's morn has struck through the gray locks which are folded back over the wrinkled temples. She stoops very much under the burden of care she used to carry for her children. She sits at home, too old to find her way to the house of God; but while she sits there all the past comes back, and the children that forty years ago trippled around her arm chair, with their griefs, and joys and sorrows—those children are gone now. Some she brought up are in a better realm, where they shall never die, and others out in the wide world, testing the excellency of a Christian mother's discipline. Her last days are full of peace, and calmer and sweeter will her spirit become, until the gates litt and let in the worn-out pilgrim into eternal springtide and youth, where the limbs never ache and the eyes never grow dim and the staff of the exhausted and decrepit pilgrim shall become the palm of the immortal athlete.

THE SALESWOMAN.

An American lady who has resided abroad long enough to imbibe foreign ideas asserts that the shop manners in America are the worst in the world, assigning as a reason for this unfortunate state of affairs that the saleswomen "are generally of the humblest origin, and are too ignorant even to appreciate the virtue of courtesy." This is a sweeping assertion, and it is in the main incorrect. Thirty years ago a shop girl might have been looked upon with contempt, because it was only the "woman who dared" who filled any responsible position in public life in this new country; but to-day it is the woman who makes the position respectable, not the position that subjects the woman to its domination, and the best blood of the nation flows to-day in the veins of shop girls. In their ranks may be found the daughters of clergymen, of generals of the army, Senators, and the penniless heirs to a pedigree for which the members of the new dynasty would gladly exchange some of their superfluous wealth. And this lady is on the wrong side of the counter to judge of their politeness. It would probable enlighten her if the shop girl should tell the experience gained on the inside of the counter—of the women who want to buy and can never make up their minds what to get, who tumble a dozen boxes of lace to select one yard of another kind, who question the shop girl about the goods as if she was personally responsible for their manufactnre, who cheapen and sharpen and deceive, and reveal their fine ladyhood in a thousand contemptible forms. If the unhappy clerk sometimes losses patience under her multitude of trials, the prosperous woman whose carriage waits can surely afford to be patient and forgiving to a sister who has so little and works so hard for that.

WOMAN AS A GUIDE.

There has always been a dim consciousness in man that his relations to the divine—that is, to the ideal side of life—were most fitly represented by the purity and single-heartedness of woman, and that she is in a manner a meditator and interpretor between him and Heaven, reversing the Puritan and, so to speak, political idea expressed in Milton's line, "He for God only, she for God in him." Of this dim consciousness the Pythia at Delphi and the Vestal Virgins at Rome were testimony. But woman as a representative of the ideal can hardly be said to have been consciously recognized until Christianity had consecrated the adoration of the Virgin Mother. Since then, although the influence of women as wives and mothers must always be immeasurably and most important and precious, it is impossible to deny that their influence has existed in other forms which have affected the history of mankind. It is enough to name Jeanne d'Arc and St. Catharine of Siena as types of a class that has proved furens quid femina possit when her frenzy is of that rare celestial kind which can work itself out in ordered action, and leave its mark in the record of the weighty affairs of men, as the lightning on the river rock. Nor yet is it as wife or mother that Beatrice is the mystic guide of Dante's spiritual life. The Middle Ages, with their sense of the nearness of the supernatural, were of course a period far more apt for such manifestations. The Puritan and reforming religions enthusiams of the seventeenth century were associated with mysticisms of a different kind, and as to the eighteenth, a Jeanne or a St. Catharine could hardly, under any modification, have co-existed with Frederick II. and Voltaire. Yet the paths of perfection in which good women have walked unsupported by man's arm have not been less thronged since then because they have been more hidden from the light. Not from deserts and hermitages or mystic oak forests have they gone forth to sway battles on the field or councils in the palace, but from inconspicuous homes into hospitals and prisons and haunts of squalid misery and vice.

Elisha's departure: Teacher—"What do we learn by the translation of the prophet Elisha?" Dull boy—"That he saved his funeral expenses." Teacher (severely)—"James!" Dull boy—"That's wot my pa says; he's an undertaker, he is, and I guess he knows. Pa 'lows he wouldn't like to have folks go off that way nowadays."

A splendid player: "Are you interested in athletic games, Miss Fitzjoy?" inquired De Maurice, as he contemplated an invitation to a base ball game. "Oh, dear, yes; I'm very enthusiastic over base ball, especially. What a splendid player that gentleman—Mr. Muff I believe they call him—is. Only the other day I noticed he scored seven in the 'e' column."

One of the peculiar shades: "What a peculiar shade is that! What could you call it?" broke in the young lady, opportunely turning to a passing costume of dark red, which emitted spasmodic gleams of indefinite white as its wearer moved on. "That," replied the elder lady, critically, "was meant, I should say, to represent crushed raspberry upon which the cream had soured."

THE LADY GODIVA LIGEND.

A "Lineal Descendant" Disbelieves The Story.

In connection with the recent Lady Godiva procession at Coventry, England, a correspondent who signs himself "A Lineal Descendant of Leofric and Godiva," writes to the London Times:—

"The fable of Lady Godiva's ride is too well known to be repeated here; it has furnished a subject for several artists of fame, both English and foreigners; but Mr. Freeman very properly describes it as simply a disgrace to English history. Now, if Lady Godiva had ever ridden through Coventry as she is said to have done, mention of so remarkable an event would certainly have been made by some of the many early writers; but they are silent on the subject. The Saxon chronicler Ingulph of Croyland, who knew Lady Godiva personally, Orderic Vitalis, almost a contemporary, Simeon of Durham, the Chronicle of Mailros, Florence of Worcester, and William of Malmesbury, say nothing of it; while the latter, when describing the abbey of Coventry, would certainly not have ommited to record the ride if it had taken place.

"The fable is first mentioned by Roger of Wendover, who flourished in the first half of the 13th century. According to him, the people of Coventry were to be assembled in the market-place to behold Lady Godiva ride through the midst of them in a state of nudity, attended by two soldiers. She had luxuriant tresses of hair which she unloosened, and thus formed a mantle which completely covered her body. Roger of Wendover adds that she was seen by no one, Matthew of Westminster, who wrote his history about 50 years later, mentions the fable. His work is a copy with additions, of Roger Hovaden who wrote about A. D. 1204, and says nothing of the ride; consequently Matthew of Westminster must have taken it from Roger of Wendover. In his version, which differs very little from that of Roger of Wendover, he seems to hint that Lady Godiva was supernaturally shrouded from mortal eyes, for he says that she, having ridden through the assembled multitude a nemine visa, advirum gaudens, hoc pro miraculo habentem, reversa est. Thus, by recording that Lady Godiva rode through the assembled multitude, Matthew of Westminster and Roger of Wendover very satisfactorily disposed of "Peeping Tom." Ralph Higden, the monk of Chester, who died A. D. 1363, Henry de Kuyghton, and John of Brompton, who were later writers, mention the fable, on the authority, no doubt, of Roger of Wendover and Matthew of Westminster. But the most conclusive evidence against Lady Godiva's ride is the simple fact that at the time when it is said to have taken place the town or borough of Coventry did not exist.

"Coventry owes its existence to the celebrated Benedictine Abbey which the Earl Leofric built for an abbot and 24 monks, at the instigation of Lady Godiva, according to Ingulph, Leofric endowed it with 24 manors, situated in seven different countries, and with half that of Coventry. The buildings were completed in A.D. 1043, and probably were commenced 20 years previously. The church was the most splendid one ever raised in England; it contained every ornament and decoration wrought by the art of man that boundless wealth, spent with lavish and pious hands, could supply. It was so enriched with gold and silver that the very walls seemed too confined to contain the treasures. Orderic Vitalis adds that Lady Godiva gave towards the abbey church all her treasures, and sending for goldsmiths devoutly distributed all the gold and silver she possessed to make the sacred books and gospels, and crosses and images of the saints and other marvellous church ornaments. In a word, for the love of God and the service of the Church she literally denuded herself of all her personal property."

"This is the true history of the noble and peerless Godiva, sister of Thorold, the shire-reeve of Lincoln, and wife of that faithful lover of his country, wise statesman, loyal subject, and devoted husband Leofric, Earl of the Mercians. Ingulph describes her as the most beautiful lady then living. Lovely as she was, the beauties of her soul and her virtues far eclipsed her personal charms. The old historians vie with each other in her praise. Yet the fame of her good work has perished. The abbey church in which she and Leofric were buried is destroyed; the foundations were dug up in 1670, and the site turned into a bowling-alley; the memory of Lady Godiva is kept alive by a fable—a disgrace to English history—and by a woman on horseback in a costume which would not be tolerated on the English stage."

The Spectre of the Toyabe.

Robert A. Marr, a member of the Government Geologic Survey, in a recent letter gives an interesting account of an atmospheric phenomenon, which he lately witnessed in the Toyabe range southwest of Montana. Mr. Marr says: "Suddenly, as I stood looking over the vast expanse beneath, I saw myself confronted by a monster figure of a man standing in mid-air before me upon the top of a clearly defined mountain peak, which had but the thin air of the valley below for a resting place. The figure was only a short distance from me. Around it were two circles of rainbow light and color, the outer one faintly defined as compared with the inner one, which was bright and clear and distinctly iridescent. Around the head of the figure was a beautiful halo of light, and from the figure itself shot rays of color normal to the body. The sight startled me more than I can now tell. I threw up my hands in astonishment and perhaps some little fear, and at this moment the spectre seemed to move toward me. In a few minutes I got over my fright, and then, after the figure had faded away, I recognized the fact that I had enjoyed one of the most wonderful phenomena of nature. Since then I have seen it once or twice from Jeff Davis' Peak, but it never created such an impression upon me as it did that evening when I was doing service as a heliotroper all along the top of Arc Dome."—Helena Herald.

A correspondent in Japan writes that there are more paid musicians in that country than in any other. This is to be accounted for by the fact that the character of Japanese music is such that nobody cares to play it except for pay.

The Standard.

MARKDALE, SEPT. 13TH, 1883.

"THE STANDARD."

This week we enter upon the fourth year of publication, and at no period in its short history has the weekly visits of the STANDARD been more appreciated, or the circulation so widely extended as the present. The patronage we have enjoyed during the three years just closed, has been liberal, and steadily increasing, in advertising and job work as well as in newspaper subscriptions. We have continued to add to our plant new and improved machinery and other material, and have now faculties for the execution of printing in all its branches, unsurpassed by any country office North of Toronto.

The STANDARD will continue in its course, free from the heat of politics, and untrammelled by sectarianism of any kind. Its columns are always open to the public for the diffusion of matters of interest and benefit to the community. We return our sincere thanks to our numerous patrons for their esteemed support and encouragement and hope to merit a continuance of the same for years to come.

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE,

The proceedings of the Union Conference at Bellevillee, have been watched during the week with interest by all sections of the Methodist people.

The basis of Union having been carried by the requisite majority, the delegates of the negotiating churches met in the Methodist Episcopal Tabernacle, Belleville, on Wednesday the 5th September, and provisionally organized with Dr. Williams in the chair. The work so far has been preparitor in its character, committees have been appointed to consider and put in shape the important questions to come before the Conference.

An explanatory statement was made by the Rev. E. Rroberts, president of the Bible Christian Church, from which it appears the present Conference in England refused to sanction the union of their body in this country with the other churches, but the opinion of the Conference seemed to be that union must be effected and that the consent of the English body would after all not be with held.

The boundaries of the Manitoba Conference and those of the Martime Provinces remain the same, but great changes have been made in those of the Ontario and Quebec. Within those bounds the Canada Methodist Church had three Conferences, there will now be six, named respectively: London, Guelph, Niagara, Toronto, Bay of Quinte and Montreal. In the two provinces there are 1,095 effective ministers, 134,632 members, with about a half a million of adherents. The Guelph conference in which Markdale is included, consists of the following district: Guelph, Stratford, Wellington, Goderich, Owen Sound and Walkerton, comprising it will be seen an exceedingly fine section of the Province. In these districts the Methodist Church of Canada has 97 circuits, 117 effective Ministers, and 15,481 members. The Methodist Episcopal has 15 circuits, 18 ministers, and 2,024 members. The primitive Methodist, 12 circuits, 13 ministers 1,038 members. The Bible Christian Church 8 circuits, 8 ministers, and 1,210 members. Total for the Guelph conference, 122 circuits, 152 effective Ministers 19 superannuated, and 19,763 members.

KEEPING UP APPEARANCE.

Keeping up appearance is in many respects highly commendable, and if the people of Markdale continue to improve the appearance of their shops and dwellings for years to come, the place will e'er long become noted for the taste displayed and the general pleasing aspect of the village. The clean streets and good sidewalks, the erection of neat fences in front of dwellings, and both nicely painted, the planting of trees, the arrangement and cultivation of flower and vegetable gardens, together with the clean and tasty appearance of the shops inside, are strong indications of culture and refinement on the part of the citizens. We hope to see this state of things continue until each citizen has his premises, whether private or public, present an appearance of thrift and taste which cannot but have benificial influence on all concerned, besides giving the most favourable impressions to strangers who may visit our town.

OBITUARY.

We learn, with regret, that Dr. Bennett, of Chatsworth, and formerly of Priceville, died in Peterborough last Friday, the 7th inst. The doctor left Chatsworth some three months since in order to take rest, being then in a poor state of health. But, instead of improving, he continued to grow worse, until the above date, when death claimed its victim. He was at his father's during his sickness and death. Dr. Bennett had a large practice and was generally successful in his profession, was but 29 years of age at his death yet he had a very large circle of acquaintances who will deeply regret his premature demise.

Sons of Temperance.

A lodge of the Sons of Temperance was organized in this place last week, by Rev. Mr. Scott Deputy Grand Patriarch.

This division starts with good prospects of success, having a membership of over thirty. There is much need of a total abstinence society in the place, and we wish it unbounded success. The following are the officers elected:—

A. McDougall,	W. M.
Mrs. T. Hill,	W. Ass.
J. M. Moffat,	R. S.
Mrs. Wm Brown,	Ass. S.
Wm. Mason,	F. S.
Jas. Munshaw,	Con.
Rev. Mr. Casson,	Chap.
Miss Kay,	I. S.
J. Lang,	O. S.

Nine Plain Good Reasons for Abstinence.

I. The very best conditions of body and mind are attained without intoxicating liquors. Science and experience pronounce alcohol entirely unnecessary to persons in health; in fact worse than useless.

II. Strong drink greatly endangers character. Multitudes under its influence have been led to infamy guilt and ruin.

III. Total abstinence fits one for helping to reclaim the fallen, for leading the young in the safe course, and for exerting a beneficial influence on society.

IV. The money which the injurious indulgence would cost can be made to do much in adding to the comforts of life, and aiding in religious and benevolent undertakings.

V. Not only is drunkenness vile in itself, but the drink also increases and intensifies other evils. The practice of total abstinence tends to counteract every vice, and favor every virtue.

VI. Common sense can find no good or substantial reasons in favor of using the poisonous drink. No advantage is lost by entirely giving it up, but many positive benefits are gained.

VII. There is no good Christian who indulges in intoxicating liquor (however moderately.) who would not be a yet better Christian if a total abstainer, and no wicked teetotaler but would, if a drinker, be made thereby a still worse member of society.

VIII. Great would be the improvement in the well-being of any community—if all adopted temperance principles and practice.

IX. Compared with drinking even only a little, strict total abstinence is safer, more patriotic, and consistent with all that is good and right.—Canada Citizen.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

FLESHERTON, Sept. 11th, '83.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR—Some weeks ago, there appeared a letter in the Flesherton Advance containing some not very creditable charges regarding the disposal of a donation fund, of which I was partly a custodian, which letter was, no doubt, generally read, so that it is not necessary to repeat it here. When I discovered who wrote this letter, (which appeared without a name, nevertheless using mine very freely) I told Mr. Fawcett I would hold no correspondence with such a character, not then knowing the particular friendship that existed between the writer and the editor. At the same time Mr. Geo. Dinwoody, who had equal charge of the fund with myself, took up the matter, and in a letter to the Advance explained it to the satisfaction, I think, of all concerned, and I thought the matter should have ended here, but in the next issue of the Aavance appeared another letter of a mean, insinuating character, not for the most part bearing upon the subject at all, which false insinuations will bear the closest scrutiny so far as my character is concerned. This letter was written and signed by S. L. M. Luke, with whom I had already refused to correspond. I went to Mr. Fawcett and told him that I wanted my name as a subscriber to the Advance, dropped as I would not support a paper that kept its columns open to unresponsible characters who were at liberty at any time to slander its supporters. Here I thought again the subject surely would have dropped, however, in last week's Advance Mr. Fawcett made it the subject of quite a lengthy editorial in which I will proceed to note a few points. First, his readiness to use his paper in defence of this very particular friend of his; secondly, he says I ordered my name off as a subscriber because he allowed S. L. M. Luke to reply to me. This is not true, for Luke never had the chance to reply to me as I would not correspond with him, but, as I stated before, it was because he allowed men like Luke to slanderously attack his subscribers, and in the third place he says I threatened what I would not do if he dared to say anything against me. Now, this I say is absolutely false, as I never used any threats, but simply told him I wished him to be careful what he printed about me in future. He says also I dared him to say anything against me; this also, is utterly false. But if he wishes to make my character a subject of public discussion he must remember two can play at that game. The reader of this brilliant editorial under consideration will note the fact, from the independent position he assumes, that Mr. Fawcett cares for nobody, Such arrogance! Imagine the people of Flesherton and vicinity withdrawing their support from the Advance for a few months and where would it and Mr. Fawcett be? echo answers where. And yet any of of its supporters are liable to be attacked at any time in this way. Towards the close of this eloquent specimen of rhetoric, he makes it very impressive by an N. B. in which he states "the Advance will be issued regularly once a week." We infer independent of everything, he don't say for how long, but we suppose for all time to come. This is a very strong assertion in this world of change and we could name two or three things that would wind as powerful an institution as the Flesherton Advance up. However, we wish it all success and have no desire to see our community thrown back again amid the scenes of the dark ages prior to the advent of the Advance amongst us, with its refining, elevating, purifying, christianizing, influence, and although I may not benefit by it directly myself in future, yet I cannot fail to feel the influence of such a high-toned periodical in our midst.

Yours respectfully,
W. G. PICKELL.

Our enterprising Photographer is now fully prepared for the fall rush, having his gallery renovated, painted and carpeted, it now presents a bright and tasty appearance, and the work being turned out justly calls forth the admiration of his numerous customers.

The Reeve of Glenelg was in town this week. Wonder what he thinks of the curiosity called a bridge, over Armstrong's creek? We are told he drove through the creek rather than risk his horse and buggie over; it's not dangerous Mr. McRae.

CURIOSITY.—Mr. Rich. Doudle, of Glenelg, captured a young snake last Saturday which had two distinct and well diveloped heads. It's a pity it did not get leave to live, as it would surely have been a terror to potato bugs. It can be seen at Turner & Co's Drug Store.

Sunday night's frost was very severe in many sections of the Dominion, and great loss in vegetables and fruits is reported. In some places ice formed half an inch thick. The destruction in the States has also been very great, corn and tobacco having suffered the most severely.

The Meaford Mirror, (the office of which was destroyed in the late Meaford fire) is again before us. The proprietors lost very heavily in the burning of their plant. We congratulate them on their speedy resumption to business and the respectable appearance of the Mirror from the new dress, and wish it unbounded success.

On Monday morning as Mrs. T. Bulleyment was out driving near the junction of Bayfield and Sykes streets the horse took fright at some boys jumping from the sidewalk and shied off the road upsetting the buggy and throwing the occupants violently out Mrs. Bulleyment was considerably shaken up and bruised though fortunately no bones were broken.—Monitor.

PICTURESQUE CANADA.—Parts 21 and 22 of this elegant, instructive and most interesting work were delivered in this vicinity last week. These parts treat particularily of the western sections of this Province, and the many explanatory illustrations give a person a good idea of the physical construction of western Ontario. The work continues to maintain the superior qualities in point of artistic, as well as mechianical execution, which characterisd the first parts presented, and every subscriber ought to be well pleased with his investment.

A young man named McDonald met with a bad accident on Monday afternoon at a threshing held at Mr. Kirvin's, on the 12th concession of St. Vincent. He was in the act of pushing some straw into the threshing machine, when his arm caught in the knuckles of the tumbling rod. The sleve of his coat was torn into shreds, and his arm fractured in two places. Monitor.

Mr. Nevison, of Uxbridge, visited this town this woek. He has leased the premises occupied by Mr. A. McDougall for a term of five years, and will take possession the 15th October. Mr. Nevison has some six or seven grown up sons who are harness makers and the business will be carried on extensively. We regret however to loose our respected townsman Mr. A. McDougall who we understand has accepted a remunerative situation at Port Arthur.

We send out this week a large number of accounts and would ask those receiving them to let us have the amounts as soon as possible. We are depending on those numerous small accounts for a livelihood, and have wages to pay, and material to purchase and cannot possibly exist on air as many appear to believe, just try and put the Golden Rule in practice, even for a short time, and we know it will make our heart glad.

As our readers are aware, our Roman Catholic friends in this Diocese have been without a Bishop since the death of the late Bishop Crinnon, nearly a year ago. It is now announced that Rev. Dr. Carberry, Prior of the Dominion Convent, Rome has been appointed Bishop of Hamilton. The new Bishop, though hailing at present from Rome, is an Irishman by birth, and is said to be a man eminent for his piety, learning and eloquence.

Advertise your stray animals in the STANDARD. Those who harbor stray animals without making it known cannot collect anything from the owner if they are called for. Advertise them and you can collect expenses for keeping as well as for the advertising. If you have lost any animals the surest way to get them is to make your loss known. If they are lost to you for ever, its worth a dollar to know it. A dollar's worth of advertising will accomplish what may not be done in twenty dollars worth of time looking and enquiring for the animals.

KILLED BY A RUNAWAY TEAM.—A man named George Weir who formerly lived on lot 7, con. 13, Proton, for about 8 years, was killed on Friday last near Sand Hill. He was in the act of passing another team, when his horses took fright, and having nothing on the waggon to sit on except the reach, he was thrown off, the hind wheel of the waggon striking him in the back of the head. He died in about 15 minutes afterward. He leaves a wife and five small children, the eldest of whom is only 7 years old. His wife only heard of the accident just a few minutes before her husband was brought in a corpse, and she was almost distracted. The corpse was conveyed to its last resting place near Dromore on Sunday last. Deceased was an industrious young man about 33 years of age, and was perfectly sober at the time of the accident. His sad accident has thrown a gloom over the entire neighborhood.—Herald.

HOW LILY FAINTED.

Lady Dyson and two servants, the lady's maid and the housemaid, were grouped around her. She looked from one to the other like a person in a dream. She was ghastly pale, and there were dark rings round her pretty eyes.

"Where is he—oh! where is he?" she gasped.

"What can she mean! her mind must be wandering!" said Lady Dyson. "I think we had better get her straight to bed, Barnes, and send for Dr. Graham."

"I'm sure I hope she isn't going to have an illness, my lady," said the lady's-maid, in a sympathetic whisper.

"I hope not; it will be most inconvenient," said her ladyship, frowning slightly.

That a governess should faint was annoying enough, but that she should presume to be actually ill was a terrible suggestion. What on earth was she to do about the children and their lessons, if Miss Finch were going to be ill!

"I'll have the doctor at once—perhaps it is only a trifle. Do you think you can get up?"

Lily dragged herself to her feet with difficulty; but tottered so, that had not Lady Dyson caught hold of her she would have fallen again.

"What happened to make you faint?" asked her ladyship, not unkindly. "Had you been feeling ill—had anything frightened you?"

Lily put her hand up to her head.

"I don't know," she answered, stupidly. "Oh! I wish I were dead!" and then she never spoke another word.

They helped her up-stairs, and put her into bed, and when Dr. Graham arrived in an hour's time she was tossing about in high fever, with hands and cheeks that burnt like fire, and in a state of wild delirium.

But Sir Edgar knew nothing of all this for a long time. When he had turned his back upon that dreadful scene in the school-room, he had gone his way with the rage and despair of betrayed love in his heart. He had heard nothing of what had passed between his brother and Lily; he had only just opened the door, and there, instead of the sweet, smiling face that was wont to lift itself brightly and delightedly at his entrance, he had seen only a sight that had filled him with horror—Lily's smooth head upon his brother's shoulder, her slender form encircled by Walter's arms, and Walter's face bent down, as it seemed to him, upon her cheek!

He had not heard her despairing cry—not seen her struggle to free herself from the hateful embrace. What he had seen only bore to him one interpretation—she was false!

That was enough for Edgar. He wanted no explanations—no excuses for what he had seen! It did not matter to him that it was his own brother more than any other man who had been with her. She had betrayed his love and his trust, and there was nothing more to be said about it. Henceforth she was nothing more to him, and he would have none of her.

Instead of being pure, and true, and stainless, she was degraded, and untrue, and unworthy; there was nothing for him but to cast her utterly out of his heart forever.

Thus he said to himself in the first wild tempest of his jealousy and his passion against her. He stood by himself alone in his study, motionless and almost heartless, and he knew that all his sweet dream of happiness was vanished and fled for evermore.

Then, as he stood there, he saw his brother cross the terrace-walk outside.

He flung open the window, and called to him.

Walter turned round sulkily, and rather defiantly. He had no mind to be lectured by his brother about such a trifle as a flirtation with an insignificant chit of a governess.

"What do you want?" he said, shortly.

"Only to ask you one question, Walter," said his brother, with unexpected gentleness.

"Ask away, then, and be quick about it."

"I saw something just now in the school-room——" began Sir Edgar with forced calmness.

"Yes—yes," interrupted Walter, impatiently. "You saw me spooning the governess.

"I wish to know whether you have been in the habit of what you call—spooning the governess?"

Walter laughed.

"My dear fellow! what a moralist you have become! Of course, I spoon every pretty woman who gives me the chance—a man is an idiot who doesn't!"

"And Miss Finch amongst the rest of those who 'give you a chance?'" inquired Sir Edgar, gravely.

"And Miss Finch amongst the rest;—of course!" answered Walter, airily. "Have you anything further to ask, Edgar?"

"Nothing more, thank you," and the baronet withdrew into his study, with a face stern and white with contempt and despair.

CHAPTER XXI.

CAUGHT AT A REBOUND.

The horses stood ready at the door—two fine, thoroughbred animals, that carried Sir Edgar and Lady Honoria upon their daily ride. But the groom had to walk them up and down for many minutes this morning, and Lady Honoria, dressed in her faultlessly-fitting dark cloth habit, had to wait too, for Sir Edgar sent her a polite message by the footman just as she came down stairs. He was very sorry indeed, but would Lady Honoria be so good as to excuse his keeping her waiting for a few minutes, as he had some very important business to transact before he could go out, which he could not very well neglect; he would come as quickly as he could.

Whatever Sir Edgar's business might be, it was transacted in his library, with locked door, and it took him about twenty minutes to get through it.

Meanwhile Lady Hororia waited in the drawing-room. Lady Dyson was up-stairs with Miss Finch, but that Lady Honoria did not know. She was quite alone in the room.

She was not the least annoyed or vexed at being kept waiting; nothing ever annoyed or vexed her. Of course she knew that men often have business which keeps them from dangling about women, and she would have been sorry had Sir Edgar neglected his on her account. Indeed, she was rather pleased at his treating her with so friendly a want of ceremony; had he been more ceremonious, she thought it would argue that he liked her less.

So she walked up and down the drawing-room. She looked at the pictures upon the wall until she had them by heart; and at the portraits in the photograph-books until she was sick of them; but all with the same imperturbable good temper, and without the slightest symptom of irritation or impatience.

At last the door opened and he entered. He was instantly struck by the pleasant, smiling face with which she welcomed him.

"Here you are! I hope you have not hurried yourself on my account."

"Not in the least, thanks. I really must apologize very much to you, Lady Honoria. I am ashamed of myself to have kept you waiting."

"Pray don't speak of it; I didn't mind waiting. Are you ready now? Shall we start?"

"Certainly."

He helped her on to her horse and they started.

One fresh canter across the soft grass in the sunshine, with the keen air bracing his senses, and the sight of that handsome bright-faced girl by his side, seemed to restore him to himself. He glanced at her admiringly.

"After all," he said to himself, "there is certainly something in birth. I ought to have known better than to place my trust in that poor little thing. Her father, it is true, was a gentleman, but her mother is an underbred, vulgar-minded woman. It was a mistake to expect nobility of soul and high notions of honor from the daughter of such a mother. It is my own folly that has blinded me to the improbability of her being trust-worthy. Now, with Lady Honoria one would be safe. There is no flaw in her ancestry; the men of her race have been always honorable, the women have never been false. One would have a certainty here. There can be nothing sly, or mean, or false about her; she may have faults, but they will be such faults as would only endear her to one."

And as they reined in their horses, being full of these thoughts, Sir Edgar turned suddenly to his companion, and said to her earnestly:

"I don't suppose you have ever told an untruth in your life, Lady Honoria?"

She turned round to him smiling, but rather surprised.

"No, I don't think so—not to my knowledge, at least. But what an odd question, Sir Edgar. Why do you ask?"

For all reply he put to her another:

"You will not be false or double-faced! You would sooner die than be one thing to a man's face and another behind his back, wouldn't you?"

She colored a little, and wondered what made him so strange this morning, but she answered him quite simply:

"I cannot even understand such things as you speak of, Sir Edgar. It is quite natural to me to tell the truth; it is no merit. My father is so honorable and sincere himself, I cannot conceive a greater shame than to be unworthy of him."

The simplicity and nobility of her answer filled him with admiration, no less than did the perfect good temper with which she had replied to his somewhat uncalled for questions.

"Forgive me," he said humbly. "I have no right, I know, to ask you such things; but if you knew how highly I prized truth and sincerity in a woman——"

She was silent, and her heart beat a little, wondering to herself what he would say next; for she liked him after her fashion, and why should he care so much to know if she was truthful unless he took some special interest in her?

For some minutes he did not speak at all, and they rode in silence side by side. Presently, however, he turned to her again.

"Lady Honoria?"

"Yes, Sir Edgar."

"You and I are very good friends, are we not?"

"Yes; indeed, I hope so."

"I cannot tell you how much I like and admire your character in every way." He would have given anything to have been able to word it differently—to have said: "How much I love you," instead; but somehow the words stuck in his throat, and he could not say them. The declaration of his affection came out lamely enough to his own ears. "I have always admired your beauty, of course, but that is nothing; it is your frank, honorable, generous self that I think so highly of, and that has won my deepest esteem and—affection. I think that you combine everything that I most desire to find in a woman. Lady Honoria, do you think you could be happy as my wife?"

And then she turned to him, smiling, and radiant, and stretched out her large, well-shaped hand in its tan glove to him.

"I am sure I should be happy as your wife," she answered simply.

"You are very good to me," he murmured, raising the hand, glove and all, to his lips; and then for several minutes neither of them spoke.

Lady Honoria was quite satisfied. It did not occur to her that there was anything lacking in the proposal which she had just accepted. He was always kind, and courteous, and pleasant to her; she had not expected rhapsodies of love and passion from him. They were well matched in years, in tastes, in position; it was the most natural thing in the world that they should marry each other. Why should he go into heroics over it? It never struck her that anything more was needed than what he had said. He told her that he admired her person and her character, and he expressed his conviction that they would be able to make each other happy. That was quite enough for her.

But what about him? Five minutes after the fatal words had passed his lips, Sir Edgar Dyson knew that he had done a foolish, if not, indeed, a wicked action. By the way in which his heart had suddenly stood still, cold and heavy as lead, within him, he knew that whilst asking this woman for truth and for sincerity, he had spoken words to her himself in which there was neither truthfulness nor honesty. There arose before him the image of Lily, with her soft, pleading eyes, her timid step, her gentle bent head—Lily who, as he believed, was false to him; yet even so, he knew, for all his anger and all his contempt against her, that her image alone reigned in his heart. It was not likely that he could have cast her out from it already, for love like that is not killed in a day.

He did his best, however, to stifle these miserable and unprofitable self-reproaches, and to persuade himself that Lady Honoria's beauty and virtues were, after all, what would make him happy and contended with his life. And as he had the heart and the manner of a gentleman, he never allowed her to perceive that there was anything wanting in his bearing as a successful lover towards her.

They rode long this morning—longer than usual—and all at once the heavens became overcast, and the bright sunshine vanished, and a heavy storm came on.

"Let us shelter at Wrexham," said Edgar; "you will get wet through; it is not more than a mile off. I dare say the Miss Kings will give us luncheon, and be glad to see us."

So they hurried on their horses through the fast-driving rain. Presently, as they pressed along the narrow lane, they met the doctor's high-wheeled gig coming along at full speed towards them. He raised his whip to his hat as he passed them, and Sir Edgar nodded back to him. The wheels splashed up the mud upon Lady Honoria's habit.

"What a pace those country doctors do go at!" she observed, when he had gone by.

"Yes, they have long distances to go sometimes, and get very badly paid for it often enough," answered Sir Edgar.

But he little guessed to whose bedside Dr. Graham was now hastening.

They found the two sisters sitting alone in the morning-room, and were most cordially welcomed by them. Norman was out, and Mr. King shut up in his own room. Stella insisted upon Lady Honoria's taking off her wet habit, that it might be properly dried, and she dressed her up in one of her own gowns. It was, of course, soon settled that the unexpected guests should remain to luncheon, and after that meal was over, that they should wait until the weather had thoroughly cleared up again.

During the course of the two or three hours spent thus at Wrexham in pleasant and friendly chatter, it was not wonderful that Lady Honoria, who was brimming over with happiness and satisfaction, should confide her secret to Stella's sympathizing ears, when she went up with her to her bedroom to change her dress. There was no occasion to make a mystery of it; a marriage so suitable in itself could not be anything but a subject of congratulation to everybody; and it was not in Lady Honoria's temperament to enjoy the delicious mystery of unspoken love.

"I have something to tell you," she said to Stella. "Sir Edgar has asked me to be his wife." Her bright, handsome face looked both happy and proud as she spoke.

"I wish you joy with all my heart," answered Stella, kissing her. She could not say less, and yet there was a startled and puzzled look in her blue eyes—Stella remembered Lily's hesitating mention of Sir Edgar's name on the day when she had offered to venture upon her service into his library, and all the sweet confusion in her glowing face, when she had returned after the short interview: and Stella had thought that she had read the meaning of it aright. Lady Honoria's confidences, therefore, were a surprise to her. But perhaps, she told herself—perhaps she had been altogether mistaken—indeed, she must have been!

But her heart ached a little for Lily, and she wondered how the news would come to the little governess in her school-room.

It was late when the newly-engaged pair got back to Barfield.

As they reached the front door, they were surprised to see Dr. Graham's gig waiting before it.

"Hallo! Graham's gig!" said Sir Edgar, dismounting, and going to Lady Honoria's assistance. "Has Lady Dyson got one of of her headaches, John?" he asked the servant.

Lady Honoria sprang to the ground, and the man-servant answered respectfully:

"No, sir, her ladyship is quite well; but Miss Finch is seriously ill!"

CHAPTER XXII.

LILY'S REVELATIONS.

She was very ill indeed; for days she lay between life and death, tossing to and fro in wild delirium on her narrow bed, and no one could say how it would end.

People said that Lady Dyson was little else than an angel, because she nursed her so unwearily and devotedly. She and her maid did it all between them; she would allow no one else to come near her—not at the first, at least. It would have been natural that Mrs. Finch should have been installed at her daughter's bedside, but Lady Dyson would not hear of it; she would not even allow her to go into her sick child's room. It could do no good, she said; there were nurses enough in herself and her maid, and the illness was fever. Fevers were terrible things, no one could tell whether they might be infectious; why should another person run the risk? She and the maid had been with her at the first; it was safer to confine the danger to themselves. Lady Dyson and Barnes, the maid, shut themselves up in a sort of quarantine, therefore, in three rooms at the end of a long upper passage, and lived there in a seclusion into which Dr. Graham's daily visits were the only intrusion. And people said, of course, that dear Lady Dyson was nothing less than a saint to nurse a poor little sick governess with such courageous self-devotion—for, of course, like all women who are mothers, the bare mention of the word "fever" must be terrifying to her.

But there were other things which had frightened Lady Dyson far more than the nature of Miss Finch's illness.

In the long watches of that first night, when Lily had been taken ill, Lady Dyson, wrapped in a warm, satin-quilted dressing-gown, and a comfortable knitted cap, had ensconced herself by her bedside, for she was neither heartless nor uncharitable, and she had thought it her duty to spend the first night of her illness in the sick girl's room. In all probability she would have delegated the office to a hired nurse on the morrow; but there were things that were revealed to her that night which made her determined that no stranger should be admitted into Lily's room, no one who had ears to, listen, or a tongue to repeat, should be allowed to be by her side.

For, during the wild ravings of the unhappy girl's delirious slumbers, Lady Dyson heard some very terrible things.

There were murmured sighs and muttered words, as she tossed about helplessly, and sometimes wild cries burst from the fever-parched lips, and whole sentences broke from her with terrible and unmistakable distinctness, revealing things to Lady Dyson which she inwardly determined no other ears but her own should have a chance of hearing—Mrs. Finch, indeed, least of all! For always the burden of these cries and moans was the name of her eldest son.

"Edgar, my darling, I have been true to you, indeed I have! Oh! do not look at me like that; as if I could think of your brother or any one before you! I will do what you want—I will be your wife in spite of everything, if only you will believe me! Oh! Edgar, don't look so angry with me! I know that you love me—of course I know it! What does it signify about your mother? I will marry you whenever you like—indeed I will, only forgive me, dearest!"

These, and much more in the same strain, were the very dreadful things that Lady Dyson sat wide awake and listened to with speechless horror during the whole of that first night's vigil.

Edgar must have made love to this girl—must actually have asked her to marry him! and Lily evidently had drawn back from the Baronet who had offered her his hand!

What had possessed him to make love to little Lily Finch? A thousand times Lady Dyson cried shame upon herself for her own short-sightedness, and her own blindness and folly. That Lily should have set her affections above herself, upon the unattainable altitude of her son, had not been out of the range of possibility; but that her son should have fallen in love with Lily to the extent of offering to marry her, that was what seemed to Lady Dyson to be a thing that no living person could possibly have foreseen.

And then she thanked her stars that the fates had mercifully revealed this dreadful thing to her before it was too late. Little by little, listening carefully to the poor child's broken utterances, and writing them down as she did so, Lady Dyson pieced out the whole story.

Edgar loved Lily, and had proposed to her, and she had—miraculous as it seemed—apparently held back from him, loving him in return, but fearing to give him her troth; and then there must have been some quarrel, and Lily had been stricken down with illness; whilst Sir Edgar, driven wild by pique and jealousy, had evidently sought forgetfulness and consolation in offering his hand to Lady Honoria. For, of course, Lady Dyson had heard the news of her son's engagement on the evening of their eventful ride—the same evening that poor Lily lay senseless and fever-stricken in her little room.

Oh! what a terrible thing it would be if Lady Honoria were to hear of this disgraceful complication with the little governess—for to Lady Dyson's ideas such a thing was nothing short of disgrace—or still worse, if Sir Edgar, touched with pity and remorse, were to own the truth to her, and withdraw his plighted faith! Lady Dyson quaked when she thought of these contingencies.

It was a real relief to her when Lady Honoria settled to go home at once. In her kindness and good-nature the Earl's daughter would have been glad enough to help her hostess to nurse the poor little governess, to whom she had invariably been kind and friendly; but, of course, Lady Dyson would not hear of it, and when she found she could do no good, she decided to go home, for her father, who was nervous about illness, desired her to come as quickly as she could.

Lady Dyson urged her eldest son to accompany his betrothed; but Sir Edgar was not to be persuaded to go away while Lily was in danger.

The two brothers, therefore, stayed in the house during the first days of Lily's illness. Sir Edgar haunted the passages and staircases, white with anxiety and sick with suspense. If she should die! he said to himself—great Heaven! He believed her to be false and fickle, and he had bound himself in desperation to another; but he knew that if Lily Finch died he should never have a light heart or a happy moment again; for false, and fickle, and untruthful though she might be, he loved her still.

It did not occur to him that he might have judged her too hastily—what he had seen seemed to him to be too plain for that; but he felt an infinite pity for the weakness and the timidity which had led her to betray her troth to him. Sometimes he felt as though he hated his brother, and yet he was anxious to propitiate him. How would Walter treat her he wondered?

Walter wandered about the house and grounds moodily and sulkily, with his pipe in his mouth, and his hands in his pockets. He looked bored and wearied beyond description, but Edgar could not make out that he was unhappy—at least, he did not go away, and that, at all events, argued something in his favor.

What might be the feelings and the meditations of that incomprehensible personage Mr. Walter Dyson, was certainly a mystery into which his brother had no chance of penetrating.

One day he boldly addressed him upon the subject nearest his heart.

"What are you going to do when you grow up if you don't know how to cipher?" asked a teacher of a slow boy. "I'm going to be a school teacher and make the boys do the ciphering," was the reply.

He was on his knees before her, and with a voice tremulous with passion he said: "Nothing shall separate us evermore, my darling! For your sake I will beard the lion in his den—I will face death on the battle field! I will skim the seas! I will endure all hardships, all suffering, all misery!" He paused and looked eagerly at her, with his whole soul quivering in his eyes.—"Will you do all this for the sake of my love?" said she, gazing earnestly at him.—"Yes, yes—a thousand times yes!"—"And if we get married" [here she blushed slightly] "will you get up first and light the fire?" With a shriek of despair he fled.

CRAZED BY HIS WIFE'S DEATH.

Sad Suicide of a Young Dentist.

Mulford S. Hunter, a young dentist, himself while insane in New York recently. Hunter's friends say that he had shown evidences of insanity for some time, and frequently threatened to kill himself. He said he would poison himself, so that he might suffer as his wife had suffered.

Hunter's insanity seems to have been caused by grief at the death of his wife. She died at 135 East Thirty-first street, July 23d last, of cerebro spual meningitis. Hunter declared that she was poisoned, and demanded an autopsy. He afterwards changed his mind and took the body to Detroit, where it was buried. Mrs. Hunter, ley, the grandmother of Mrs Hunter, for an investigation, and Coroner Mc looked into the circumstances of her death and found nothing wrong.

Hunter returned from Detroit on Aug. occupied a room at 264 Sixth avenue, resumed business with his partner, Dr. Van Vleck, at 284 Sixth avenue. A change was noticed in his disposition. He was 30 years of age. Before the death of his wife he had been cheerful and attentive to business. He now became melancholy, irritable, and indisposed to work. He left Dr. Snow, with whom he boarded, that he had read in the Bible and had failed to find any comfort there. He said he had talked with the Jesuits of St. Francis Xavier's with a view of joining the Catholic Church, which his wife had belonged, but had found no consolation. He roamed about the streets at night. Once he paid a hackman $10 to drive him about for hours.

On Thursday night last he attempted to enter the residence of the doctor who had attended his wife. The doctor was out of town, and Hunter went away. He went home to dinner in the middle of the day on Friday, but did not come in to supper between 10 and 11 o'clock that night he went to the doctor's residence again, and entered the parlor by a window. The doctor's wife was sleeping in a rear room. She screamed when Hunter tried the doors and he ran down the street. He went to his room and wrote the following on cards and pieces of blank paper:

Gone to meet my darling. No inquest, autopsy, if you please. Ship my body to Capt. M. T. Hunter, 25 Miami avenue, Detroit, Mich., care of Gier & Son, undertakers, at Detroit.

Brother Henry, please place me beside my darling. No funeral; no crape to be worn by any one respecting me. All property, personal or real, I give to my father, to dispose of as he sees fit. Now I am out of misery. The doctor killed my darling, and I have spared his life, therefore it is only right to take mine, and God will receive me. But the doctor has murdered two innocent people, who never did him an injury and gave him cause, as we were entire strangers to him. He has admitted to me that she died from blood poisoning. But I cannot bring her back again, and I am lonely without her, and she is as lonely as I am, and discovered by that last yearning look she gave when she breathed her last. That invitation to come follows me, and I only regret I did not go before now. Good-bye to every one. I am happy and hope for future happiness. Yours, Mulford S. Hunter.

On the card of the doctor the word "surgeon" was scratched out and "murderer" was written in its place, and on the back of the card was written:

This doctor is the man that murdered myself and wife, and the public will now understand it. I demanded an investigation, but they would not hear to me, saying I was insane. But people know better. I hope you will all understand.

On a piece of paper was written:

To whom it may concern: Please return this revolver to Joseph Tilton, as I took it from his house to-day. Oblige, Mulford S. Hunter.

After writing Hunter stood beside his bed and shot himself in the right breast. The bullet pierced the lungs. The shot and his groans alarmed the household, but they were afraid to go near him. A policeman was sent for, and Dr. Snow entered the room with him. Hunter was leaning against the bed, conscious and suffering great pain. Dr. Snow asked him if he was not sorry for his act, and he said "No." An ambulance carried him to the New York Hospital, where he asked the doctors to let him die in peace. He died just before 1 o'clock.

It is believed that he had intended to kill the doctor whom he visited and the doctor's wife also. The doctor returned to the city and, hearing of Hunter entering the house, was about to have him arrested as a dangerous lunatic when he learned of his suicide.

A Slight Mistake.

She was a thin, narrow, dark-visaged woman with "specs" on, and she carried a package of tracklets and leaflets which she scattered broadcast among the sinners in the Cass avenue car in which she rode. When only one or two of the pamphlets were left a man got in. He was on his way to the depot, a countrymen, going home evidently. He had a big watermelon which he disposed of tenderly on the seat next to him, and a glass flask with a rubber cork stuck boldly out of his coat pocket.

"Heugh!" he panted as he stuffed his fare in the box. "Hotter than harvestin' up here, ain't it?"

Everybody looked cold disapproval at him as good, polite, Christian people do when spoken to in a street car; all but the woman with the "tracks." She fished one out and extended it to him.

"Thankee," he said, receiving it in a brown paw; "comic almanac, hey?"

"No sir," said the woman, firmly, in a high falsetto voice. "It's to save your immortal soul. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wine," and she pointed with a crooked fore-finger to the glass flask protruding from the breast pocket.

"Oh, I see," said the man, smiling good-humoredly on his sour-visaged vis-a-vis; "but the bottle ain't for me, ma'am."

"Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink," quoted the woman fiercely.

"He ain't eggsactly my neighbor eyther," said the man. "You see, it's the new baby, and the wife calculates to bring him up by hand, and this bottle's for him, bless its pootsy tootsy, Where's the rigging of it?" and, diving into another pocket he fished out some India rubber tubing, etc.

The woman didn't wait to finish her dissertation but got out without asking the driver to stop.

THE FARMERS CORNER.
